Mr. PERKINS. I present a petition of sundry citizens and taxpayers of San Jose, Cal., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAN JOSE, CAL., January 29, 1910.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The undersigned citizens and taxpayers of the city of San Jose, county of Santa Clara, Cal., respectfully and earnestly request the Congress of the United States and the Committees on Military Affairs of the House and Senate to make an early and favorable report and promptly pass the bill (S. 1483) to create in the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "The civil-war volunteer officers' retired list," etc., now pending before the Senate committee, and a similar bill—H. R. 18899—pending before the House committee, for the following good and sufficient reasons:

A large majority of those who were old enough to be commissioned officers and served for the period named in said bills have now reached the average advanced age of 70 years or more. That a postponement of this just measure to those who saved and perpetuated this Republic, which is along the lines of the bill granting the same honors and rewards to those in the army of the Revolution, who created the Republic, will be equivalent to its denial, as the infirmities, diseases, and wounds, added to their age, will in a very short time deplete their ranks to a mere corporal's guard, and thus deprive some of the best, truest, and most heroic, deserving, and suffering of these veterans of the honors and benefits of this desired law.

As thousands of citizens have signed petitions to Congress and the legislatures of 12 States passed resolutions asking for its passage, we feel that we are justified in this appeal.

We, like a large majority of loyal and patriotic citizens, believe that this just measure should not be postponed on the ground of economy in public expenditures, for the good reason that appropriations for hundreds of small creeks, sluggish rivers, new post-offices, and other federal buildings, increase in salaries, creation of new offices, etc., can well be postponed with no lasting detriment to the public, no extinction by death of future opportunity for the appropriations, and ample time for realization in a few years.

Inasmuch as the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, in his report, has estimated a surplus of $35,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1910, we respectfully submit that the bill should not be postponed to other less important, less just, and less patriotic measures.

Respectfully submitted.

W. G. Lorigan, associate justice supreme court, State of California; P. F. Gosbey, judge of superior court, State of California; J. R. Welch, judge of superior court, State of California; John E. Richards, judge of superior court, State of California; W. F. Parker, county auditor; L. A. Spitzer, county assessor; H. A. Pfister, county clerk; E. W. Conant, county treasurer; Winthrop Beans, president of the Bank of San Jose; Wm. V. Dinsmore, cashier of the Bank of San Jose; Hiram D. Tuttle, attorney and counselor; J. W. Dinsmore, clergyman.

Mr. PERKINS presented a memorial of Local Union No. 586, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Sacramento, Cal., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to increase the rate of postage on periodicals and magazines, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Merchants' Association of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CRAWFORD presented memorials of sundry citizens of Wilmot, Cottonwood, Bryant, Bradley, Midland, Lennox, and Canton, all in the State of South Dakota, and of the Grand Council of Minnesota, the Dakotas, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, United Commercial Travelers of America, of St. Paul, Minn., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "postal savings-bank bill," which were ordered to lie on the table.

ISSUANCE OF REVENUE STAMPS.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I present a statement embracing correspondence between the Bureau of Internal Revenue and the attorney for the White Earth Bands of Chippewa Indians in Minnesota in relation to the bill which I introduced on the 24th ultimo, and now pending before the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to prohibit the issuance of internal-revenue stamps in any State or Territory in which the liquor traffic is prohibited by law. I ask that the correspondence, which is not long and which relates to the bill now before the Committee on Interstate Commerce, be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the statement was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE EARTH BANDS OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS IN MINNESOTA,
February 12, 1910.

Hon. COE I. CRAWFORD,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In the matter of the bill (S. 5605) introduced by you, I take the liberty of bringing to your attention some correspondence of mine, as attorney for the White Earth Chippewas, relative to the subject.

Inclosed is a copy of my letter to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, urging that the sale of revenue tax stamps on the White Earth Reservation in particular, and in Indian country generally, be suspended or discontinued. In reply, I received the following letter, dated April 27, 1909:

C. E. RICHARDSON, Esq.,
500 Hibbs Building, Washington, D. C.

SIR: This office is in receipt of your letter of the 24th instant urging that this office refuse to issue special-tax stamps to dealers within the boundaries of Indian reservations, especially the White Earth Reservation.

In reply, herewith is transmitted for your information a copy of a recent treasury decision stating the position of this office with relation to the issuance of special-tax stamps, and your attention is called to the fact that the provision for a special tax on dealers being purely a revenue measure and not a police regulation no discretion is lodged either in this office or elsewhere to refuse the tax when tendered, and the issuance of the stamp, which, under the law and a decision of the United States Supreme Court, is the required receipt for the tax.

Respectfully,

ROBT. WILLIAMS, Jr.,
Acting Commissioner.

The inclosure referred to was T. D. 1484, in the case of a resolution passed by the legislature of South Dakota, with which you are already familiar, in which the point is made that "the payment of the tax is not a license."

Whether or not the federal revenue tax stamp is in fact a license, it is, nevertheless, in effect a license, and is so regarded, spoken of, and relied upon. The inclosed label, taken from a bottle purchased by me in a prohibition town in Minnesota, contains the assurance:

"May be legally sold without a government, state, or city license."

This opinion and reliance are practically universal among the dealers in my State (Minnesota), and probably throughout the Union. For several years I occupied a municipal office which required me to issue the state license to liquor dealers, and without exception the 250 applicants spoke of the government revenue stamp as the "government license."

While the Department of the Interior, assisted by the Department of Justice, is trying to enforce the provisions of treaties with the Indians (in which the Government guarantees that no intoxicating liquors will be allowed in the "Indian country"), and while it may be reasonably inferred that anyone applying for or purchasing a revenue tax stamp for use in proscribed territory is not a "dealer" within the purview of the Revised Statutes, but an outlaw, it does seem that the Treasury Department should rule against the issue of such stamps (licenses) in such districts, especially as it renders difficult, if not ineffectual, the efforts of these coordinate branches of the Government to enforce and maintain the laws. In addition to that are the humanitarian reasons touched upon in my letter above referred to and herewith inclosed, which reasons, based upon that fundamental law, public policy, should outweigh any consideration of revenue, financial expediency, or technical construction of a general statute.

Your bill, however, should it become a law, will effectually cover the entire situation. I sincerely trust that it may, and if my experience with or views upon the subject can be of any use, you may utilize this letter in any way that you choose.

Yours, very truly,

C. E. RICHARDSON,
Attorney for the White Earth Bands of Chippewa Indians in Minnesota.

APRIL 24, 1909.

Hon. COMMISSIONER, BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On the White Earth Reservation, in Minnesota, there are several villages erected upon allotments patented to individuals, and thereby, it is claimed, severed from the reservation. In these villages are numerous barrooms, the effect of which has proven very demoralizing to the Indians. Not only do they suffer the ordinary results of intoxication, but they are made drunk by unprincipled adventurers who take this means of securing title to the Indians' lands.

My purpose in mentioning the foregoing facts is to justify, if possible, the suggestion that if the internal-revenue officers would refuse to issue the tax stamps to dealers within the boundaries of Indian reservations, especially White Earth Reservation, your office would render great assistance to the poor deluded natives, as well as to those on the outside who are striving to aid them morally and financially, including the Interior Department of the Government.

It is my belief that the whole reservation, whether patented to individuals or not, is Indian country within the meaning of the federal prohibition. In addition to this fact, there is the other, that most of the sales of intoxicants upon this reservation are to Indians, and this is in violation of a law of the State of Minnesota. I am told that the county officers either refuse or neglect to prosecute these violations; and it becomes necessary for us to look about for other possible means of relief from a situation which is already bad, indeed, and daily becoming steadily worse. Not only are lives and morals corrupted and destroyed, but the entire fortunes of whole families are sacrificed as a result of the mental condition which follows indulgence by an Indian in intoxicating drinks.

Should it be possible by the employment of any law, rule, or regulation of your department to refuse to issue the internal-revenue tax stamp to these people who are violating both the state and federal laws, it would, in all probability, accomplish more for the protection of defenseless, worthy people than any other one thing that I can think of.

If any further discussion on my part of the questions herein touched upon can be of use to your office, I will be glad to either call upon you or to file a brief in the matter.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

C. E. RICHARDSON,
Attorney for the White Earth Bands of Chippewa Indians of Minnesota.

COMMERCIAL ASPECTS OF MACHINE TELEGRAPHY.

Mr. OWEN. I present a communication entitled "A Study of the Commercial Aspects of Machine Telegraphy," prepared by Romyn Hitchcock, of New York. The communication is short, and I move that it be printed as a document (S. Doc. No. 373), together with the illustrations, for the information of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

REGULATION OF FEDERAL-COURT PRACTICE.

Mr. BURTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3724) regulating injunctions and the practice of district and circuit courts of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM OF RITTENHOUSE MOORE.

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,653.05 in settlement of the claim of Rittenhouse Moore for over-width dredging in the Potomac River, city of Washington, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIM.

Mr. CRANE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4680) for the allowance of certain claims for indemnity for spoliations by the French prior to July 31, 1801, as reported by the Court of Claims, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. LORIMER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 13832) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. FRAZIER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $150,000 for continuing improvement by the construction of Locks and Dams Nos. 8 and 9, Cumberland River, Tennessee, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 for continuing the work of cleaning out and improving Caney Fork River, Tennessee, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MARTIN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for straightening the north side of the channel at the entrance to Cape Charles Harbor, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for the necessary dredging and widening of the approach to the western branch of the Elizabeth River, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GAMBLE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $500,000 for the improvement of the Missouri River from Kansas City to Fort Benton, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $52,500 for building dams and constructing reservoirs at Lake Kampeska, Lake Poinsett, and on the Sioux River in South Dakota, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SCOTT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for improving Tug Fork, Big Sandy River, West Virginia and Kentucky, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOURNE submitted an amendment providing for the survey of the Oregon Slough Branch of the Columbia River, opposite Vancouver, Wash., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE submitted an amendment providing for the examination and survey of the East Haven River, Connecticut, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

EDWARD A. KEELER.

Mr. LORIMER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 183), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Senate resolution 183.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate is hereby directed to place the name of Edward A. Keeler on the employees' roll of the Senate, to date from and after the passage of this resolution, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate pending further provision by law, and that such employment be continued until otherwise ordered by the Senate.

INCREASED COST OF LIVING.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the committee to examine into prices shall consist of eight members instead of seven, the additional member to be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island for a moment to one feature. As the committee is now constituted, I understand that there are four of one political party and three of the other.

Mr. ALDRICH. There are five of one and two of the other.

Mr. BACON. Very well. I had no intimation as to the Senator's purpose to make this motion.

Mr. ALDRICH. My purpose is to give the Democrats an additional member.

Mr. BACON. I supposed that was it, and for that reason I made the inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the membership of the committee to examine into the cost of living, and so forth, be increased from seven to eight, the additional member to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN the additional member of the committee.

Subsequently, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN was, on his request, excused from service upon the committee.

RIVERS AND HARBORS—WATER RESOURCES.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, it is my purpose to speak on the amendment to the river and harbor bill offered by me a few days since, and as I wish to be brief I request leave, without reading, to print in the RECORD certain portions of the reports of the Inland Waterways Commission and the National Waterways Commission, a communication from President Taft, then Secretary of War, to the Commerce Committee regarding Senate bill No. 500, introduced by me at the last Congress; a letter from Mr. BURTON, the chairman of the Inland Waterway Commission, relating to the same bill, and other public documents.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent to print as a portion of his speech certain documents to which he has referred. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I simply wish to ask the Senator if those documents were not printed in the speech delivered by him some months ago?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No.

Mr. SMOOT. It is entirely different matter from that I refer to. I have no doubt the Senator remembers.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The documents to which the Senator refers were with reference to the conservation movement. Yes; one of them was printed in that speech; but these are brief references simply, which are necessary to my argument; and I ask the consent of the Senate now, in order to avoid taking up their time with the reading.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No objection is heard, and the order asked for by the Senator from Nevada is entered.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I offered a few days since an amendment to the river and harbor bill and requested that it lie on the table, and I gave notice of my intention to speak regarding it. Since then I have determined to amend the amendment by the insertion in line 9, after the word "of," of the words "navigation as a part of." I offer the amended amendment as a substitute for the former amendment, and ask its reference to the Committee on Commerce, and that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Commerce and printed. Is there objection to printing the amendment in the RECORD?

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. NEWLANDS to the bill (H. R. 20686) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, viz: Insert the following:

"The President is authorized to bring into coordination and cooperation with the Corps of Engineers of the Army the other scientific or constructive services of the United States that relate to the study, development, and control of waterways and water resources and subjects related thereto, and to the development and regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, with a view to uniting such services through a board or boards in investigating questions relating to the development, improvement, regulation, and control of navigation as a part of interstate and foreign commerce, including therein the related questions of irrigation, forestry, swamp-land reclamation, clarification of streams, regulation of flow, control of floods, utilization of water power, prevention of soil waste, cooperation of railways and waterways, and promotion of transfer facilities and sites, and in forming comprehensive plans for the development of the waterways and water resources of the country for every useful purpose by cooperation between the United States and the several States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals within the jurisdiction, powers, and rights of each, respectively, and with a view to assigning to the United States such portion of such development, promotion, regulation, and control as can be properly undertaken by the United States by virtue of its power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce and by reason of its proprietary interest in the public domain, and to the States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals such portion as properly belongs to their jurisdiction, rights, and interests, and with a view to properly apportioning costs and benefits, and with a view to so uniting the plans and works of the United States within its jurisdiction, and of the States and municipalities, respectively, within their jurisdictions, and of corporations, communities, and individuals within their respective powers and rights, as to secure the highest development and utilization of the waterways and water resources of the United States; and he is authorized to appoint as members of such board or boards such engineers, transportation experts, and constructors of eminence as he may deem advisable: Provided, however, That until further authorized by law, the total expenditure under this provision shall not exceed —— dollars."

THE WATERWAYS PROPAGANDA.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the question of the development of the waterways of the country has been receiving great attention within the past few years. Various organizations have been formed throughout the country relating to the development of our waterways, associations appropriately named for the promotion of such development in the Mississippi Valley, on the various tributaries of the Mississippi, on the Atlantic, the Pacific, and the Gulf coasts. This movement reached such headway through conventions and river and harbor congresses that Mr. Roosevelt, then President, took the matter in hand and appointed a commission in aid of his power of recommendation to Congress, called "the Inland Waterways Commission," which made a preliminary report to him, which report was subsequently submitted to Congress.

It was my privilege to serve on that commission, and whilst a member of it I introduced a bill, Senate bill No. 500, in the Sixtieth Congress, first session, for the organization of an inland waterways commission, for the coordination of the various scientific services of the Government that related in any way to the development of our waterways and water resources, and for cooperation between the Nation and the States, municipalities, and private interests in the development of these waterways. That bill, with certain modifications, was approved by the then Secretary of War and by the Inland Waterways Commission, of which Mr. BURTON, of Ohio, was the chairman. It was referred to the Commerce Committee and there considered. But it did not come up for passage.

Since then Congress itself took the matter in hand and appointed a National Waterways Commission, composed entirely of Senators and of Representatives, the previous Inland Waterway Commission appointed by the President under his executive power of recommendation being a mixed commission, consisting of two Senators, two Members of the House of Representatives, and five others—the Chief of the Engineer Corps of the Army, the Chief of the Reclamation Service, the Chief of the Forest Service, the Chief of the Bureau of Soils, and the Chief of the Bureau of Corporations.

Both these commissions have agreed substantially upon the lines of their recommendation as to legislation. They have declared for coordination of the scientific and constructive services of the Government in this great work and for the cooperation of the Nation with States, municipalities, corporations, and individuals that have any jurisdiction over or any right or interest in the development of our waterways, the purpose being to unite the information, the experience, of the scientific services of the Government, and to unite the energies of all the various sovereignties and of all the corporations and individuals having jurisdiction over or interest in the water resources of the country in developing our waterways, not only for navigation, but for every other useful purpose.

THE NATION'S POWER OVER WATERWAYS.

I apprehend that the Senate has little question regarding the importance of these related questions in considering that of navigation. The power of the United States, so far as our waterways is concerned, is derived from that clause of the Constitution which gives Congress the power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce. Navigation being a part of interstate and foreign commerce, thus comes within the national jurisdiction.

The Nation also has an additional interest in the waterways of the country arising from its proprietary interest in the public domain; a larger interest than any other single proprietor in the United States. It is by reason of this constitutional power and by reason of this proprietary right that the Nation itself is called upon to act and can justify its action.

So far as every other matter is concerned the jurisdiction necessarily belongs to the States under their reserved powers. The aim of all legislation should be to combine the powers and energies of all interested in these waterways in united plans, in comprehensive plans, and in united action which will result in each doing its appointed work within its jurisdiction and powers under a comprehensive plan so framed.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

COOPERATION WITH STATES.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not know whether or not the Senator from Nevada desires to proceed uninterruptedly, but I should like to know whether the proposition is to coordinate by law or by consent outside of legislation as between the States and the Government.

Mr. NEWLANDS. No coordination, of course, between the Nation and the States will be effective without the consent of both; and that, of course, can only be secured by law.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to know whether or not, in the judgment of the Senator from Nevada, it is competent for either the State or the Nation to enlarge or subtract from the constitutional powers that they have in regard to legislating, and whether there can be any overlap even by consent.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I would have covered that before completing my remarks, and I should prefer, as I wish to be brief, to go on without interruption, if the Senator will permit me; but I will answer now the question put by the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely desire, with the Senator's permission, to say that I only asked a question after inquiring of the Senator whether he desired to go on uninterruptedly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly; I acquit the Senator from Idaho of any intention to embarrass me, but I simply stated that I wished to be brief, and therefore would prefer to answer questions at the close of my remarks; but I will answer now the question put by the Senator from Idaho.

The Senator from Idaho asks whether it is competent for either the Nation or the State by agreement with each other to enlarge the jurisdiction or the power of either or to act outside of the jurisdiction and powers conferred upon both by their organic law.

I wish to say, regarding this, that I do not believe the power of the Nation can be enlarged without constitutional amendment, and I do not believe that the power of the States can be enlarged without constitutional amendment, and that certainly the powers of neither can be enlarged without constitutional change in such a way as to enable either to trench in any manner upon the power of the other; but the view I take of it is that the Nation and the State, each within their respective jurisdictions, are sovereign; that sovereigns have the right to deal with each other; and that, in a matter of common interest and of common benefit, where the action of both is absolutely necessary in order to carry out a beneficial purpose, whilst Congress itself may not act as the representative of all the States, because no power has been delegated to it for that purpose, yet it can act in such a way that with the cooperation of the States secured through their independent legislation a beneficial result can be accomplished.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, may I be pardoned for trespassing upon the time of the Senator from Nevada?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. Does that amount to more than proposing that the United States shall lobby in the legislatures in order to secure certain concessions, and that the legislatures shall lobby in Congress in order to procure certain concessions? Is not that what it amounts to?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No; Mr. President, I look to no such undignified action on the part of either sovereign. The purpose of my amendment is to provide a dignified method of counseling between the Nation and the States through the selection of boards appointed by the President, which can confer with similar boards organized by the States with reference to matters of common interest, the framing of plans which can be suggested to both sovereigns for their ratification and approval; plans which will fall without the ratification and approval of both; the purpose being to create simply the machinery of consultation, the machinery of cooperation between equal sovereigns, all acting within their respective jurisdictions.

THE RELATED USES OF WATER.

Mr. President, I imagine that there will be little difference of opinion that these related questions of forestry, of the reclamation of arid lands, of the drainage of swamp lands, of the development of water power, and the clarification of streams, all have a relation to the development of waterways for the purpose of navigation. The development of a waterway for navigation may be entirely impracticable because of its cost; but if we can unite with the development of that waterway, the reclamation of the arid lands above, the drainage of swamp lands below, and the intermediate development of valuable water power, we then add to the natural resources of the country and create values which in themselves will be compensatory of the entire work, whereas the work would not be in any measure self-compensatory if confined to navigation alone.

We have in this Government various scientific services, services of a very high standard, services of great esprit de corps, services that have won the admiration and respect not only of Congress, but of the entire country. These services are now acting entirely separate and apart from each other, and yet they are all practically acting upon parts of the same subject-matter.

We have the Engineer Corps of the Army operating simply upon the question of navigation. Their efforts thus far have been largely confined simply to the maintenance of a stable channel through the operations of dredging and bank protection. We have the Reclamation Service engaged in the diversion of the flood waters of the upper reaches of streams, carrying those flood waters over the arid lands, and thus aiding in the prevention of the extraordinary floods which impair the efficiency of the channel of the river below. We have in them an agency for flood prevention and for the storage of the flood waters which will aid and promote navigation. Then, we have below vast areas of swamp land, rich with alluvial soil, the deposits of ages, almost useless because of the annual overflow, and the channel of the river itself so scattered and diverse as not to permit navigation anywhere.

The problem there is to make one navigable channel by bank protection and by bank levees, and by one process thus clear the channel for navigation and at the same time promote the reclamation of vast areas of rich and fertile land. So, also, in the development of our works for navigation we are compelled in places to provide for dams and locks in the rapids of the river where there is a rapid fall, and those dams and locks are useful for the development of water power, which in itself is partly compensatory of the project.

We have, then, the Reclamation Service; we have the Forest Service; we have the Weather Service; we have the Soils Service; we have the Coast and Geodetic Survey; and we have the Geological Survey, all of them engaged in the study of questions relating to water, its development, and its regulation and control. Is it not the businesslike thing to provide some method by which those services can be brought together for consultation and joint action?

The purpose of this amendment is to permit the President of the United States to bring into coordination, through a board or boards, these related services; to bring them into coordination with the Corps of Engineers of the Army, leaving that as the central organization in connection with the development of our waterways, as it has been for so many years, but giving it the benefit of the advice and the accumulated experience and information of these great services which have been making a study of similar subjects.

WATER AND RAIL COOPERATION.

Then there is the question of transportation. The National Waterways Commission in its very elaborate and able report presents the question of the development of our waterways in connection with railways, insisting that the decline of waterway transportation thus far has been due to the fact that the railways have discouraged water transportation and have sought by unfair competition to destroy it. So, in connection with this great work, we should be allowed the opportunity of calling upon the great transportation experts of the country, and also the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission themselves, for the purpose of advising this board, or these boards, regarding methods that will bring water and rail into cooperation and make each the friend and ally instead of the enemy of the other.

Then, outside of the scientific services of the Government, we have developed in this country the greatest engineers and the greatest constructors known in the world's history—great architects, great builders, great engineers. We should have the benefit of the information, the experience, and the advice of these in the formation of plans; and the amendment which I propose gives the President of the United States the power to add to such board or boards engineers, constructors, and transportation experts of eminence, with a view to aiding in the formation of these comprehensive plans.

COOPERATION WITH STATES.

Mr. President, the next question is the cooperation between the Nation and the States in this great work. Thus far we have been content with Congress alone as the agency of the States in matters requiring union of effort; but our Nation is a sovereignty of limited powers. It can act only under the granted powers, and it is impossible for it to act as sovereign upon every branch of the questions relating to the development of our waterways.

Its sovereign power rests upon navigation alone. Its proprietary interest rests upon its ownership of the public domain. Within its power and its interest it can act, but outside of them it can not, except in the way of forming helpful plans, in which the individual States, corporations, and municipalities can cooperate. So it is proposed in this amendment that the President shall take steps, through the board or boards, to frame comprehensive plans involving the powers and the rights of States, corporations, and municipalities, giving them the power to confer with similar organizations, authorized by these sovereignties and interests, and thus to frame comprehensive plans which will finally be submitted to Congress for its action and to the various States for their action, and which, if carried through, will result not only in comprehensive plans, but in comprehensive and efficient work.

IMPORTANCE OF PERFECTING ORGANIZATION.

Mr. President, it is important, it seems to me, that action should be taken now, and that action should be taken upon the river and harbor bill, for, under the impetus of public sentiment and driven by public opinion, notwithstanding that this is a year of deficit, the House of Representatives has passed a bill involving appropriations of $42,000,000. So that the policy is now to be entered upon, and they declare that a part of the policy is continuing appropriations and an annual appropriation bill. The chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House has declared that the appropriation of $42,000,000 contained in the bill covers simply parts of projects which have been approved by the engineers of the army, whose ultimate cost will be over $225,000,000. He also states that outside of these projects, the partial construction of which is permitted by the bill, the engineers of the army have approved projects costing about $85,000,000. So that we are already committing ourselves now to projects involving $300,000,000, and, if we confine ourselves to them, it means within a period of ten years an annual appropriation of $30,000,000. But the American people will not be content with this.

TRANSPORTATION A CHARGE ON OUR NATURAL RESOURCES.

The railroad managers have declared that it is essential, in order to meet the transportation requirements of the country in the near future, that at least $5,000,000,000 shall be expended upon the railways of the country. That $5,000,000,000 is a charge upon the natural resources of the country, as is so well stated in the report of the national commission. The interest upon it, amounting to at least $250,000,000 annually, will be paid by the shippers of the country, and is it not a wise thing for us to consider whether we can not reduce in part the necessity for such enormous expenditure by spending within the next ten years $500,000,000, and even perhaps a billion dollars in the aggregate? It is reasonably to suppose that the expenditure of a billion dollars in waterway transportation at the rate of $100,000,000 a year during the next ten years will save more than half of the necessary expenditure of $5,000,000,000 upon the railways.

Why is it that the railways have been unequal to the transportation requirements of the country? Why was it that two or three years ago they broke down just before the panic? It was simply because the railroads were made the agencies of transporting the bulky and cheap products of the country, products which could be better and more cheaply carried by water, and in reference to the transportation of which time was not an essential. Inquire of any railroad man, and you will find that the breaking down of the transportation system of the country was not due to the transportation of the high-priced products, which pay high freight, but to the coarser products, the products of the mine, the products of the field and the farm, such products as in Germany are carried mainly by waterway transportation, and which in this country, if we perfect our waterway transportation, can be carried largely upon the rivers of the country; so that it is important for us to act now and to establish the system under which we are to proceed.

The amendment which I have offered, whilst not going so far as I would desire to do, as indicated in my appendix to the report of the Inland Waterways Commission, goes as far as the judgment of Congress will at present sanction; but I believe that, so far as providing for coordination of the scientific services of the country, providing for comprehensive plans, and for cooperation between the Nation and the States is concerned, Congress will readily see the propriety of this amendment. Then we will have enlisted not only the information and experience of the Engineer Corps of the Army, but the information and experience of every scientific service of the Government and the services of the best engineers, constructors, and transportation experts of the country in the solution of these important problems; and we can enter upon this great work with comprehensive plans, assigning to each sovereign its duty, to each interest its duty, properly apportioning costs and benefits, instead of entering upon an accidental and disjointed development, which may result, I fear, in the shipwreck of the waterway movement of the country.

THE ENGINEER CORPS OF THE ARMY.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to disclaim at the very start any purpose in this amendment to cut down in any way the duty or the effectiveness of the Engineer Corps of the Army. No one has a higher respect than I have for that organization; but we must recall the fact that there are only, I believe, 180 officers in it. The Engineer Corps of the Army takes the pick of every class that is educated at West Point. When any class is graduated in which there are not men of the quality that is required for the Engineer Corps of the Army, as we have been told by President Taft, it is the custom of the Engineer Corps to report that it will not require additional officers that year. So that the area of their selection is limited. You can not increase the Engineer Corps efficiently to-day by providing that instead of taking five men from each class you will take ten men from each class, for if you do that, the chances are that the lower five will be men not possessing the high qualifications which thus far have characterized that corps.

You can only increase the number of engineers coming from West Point by largely increasing the membership of West Point itself. If to-day only 5 per cent of the West Point graduates are fitted for the Engineer Corps of the Army, you can not take 10 per cent and make them efficient for that corps. If to-day the number that graduates every year is 100, you will have to enlarge the number to 200 in order to secure by the selection of 5 per cent hereafter a double number of engineers equal in efficiency to those who have heretofore served the Government. So it is a difficult thing to enlarge the Engineer Corps of the Army; and, as stated by Secretary Taft in his letter with reference to the bill which I had pending in this body, the Engineer Corps of the Army is not a body of initiative. He speaks of it as one of the merits and one of the virtues of the Engineer Corps of the Army that it is not a body of initiative. They obey the directions of Congress; when Congress asks them to make a survey, they make it; and when Congress asks them to make a report, they make it; but they do not enter upon the study of this great subject with the idea of initiating, with the idea of forcibly presenting to Congress the considerations which are in their minds that call for the development of the waterways of the country. That is what we need; and we will get that element by incorporating with them the chiefs of the great scientific services of the country and the great engineers, constructors, and transportation experts, whose appointment this amendment calls for. Here is what Secretary Taft said upon this subject in his letter of April 17, 1908, addressed to the Senate Committee on Commerce regarding Senate bill 500, which I had introduced in the Sixtieth Congress and which was similar in its terms to Senate bill 3717, introduced by me in this Congress:

(c) The bill provides for correlating the existing agencies in the Departments of War, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce and Labor through certain powers vested in the President. The need for some such plan is sufficiently shown by the fact that while this country is better endowed with waterways than any other our streams are less used for navigation and other public purposes than those of other countries. Since this provision touches duties placed on the War Department by law, it has received careful consideration. It does not appear that the measure would interfere with the functions of the War Department, or with the continuation and extension of the engineering work now performed there, but it is believed that the provision for administration would tend to promote the general welfare. Accordingly this feature meets the approbation of the War Department.

(e) The bill provides also for the initiation of projects by a board of experts. These provisions affect the work of the War Department and have had careful consideration. Suitable provisions for expert initiation and prompt execution are essential to the proper development of any system of river improvement. The chief defect in the methods hitherto pursued lies in the absence of executive authority for originating comprehensive plans covering the country or natural divisions thereof. The creation of an Inland Waterways Commission for the purpose of initiating plans for the improvement of waterways seems to me a more effective way of a general plan for the improvement of all the waterways in the country than under the present provisions of law. This would not dispense with the admirable machinery furnished by the War Department for the improvement of waterways when the plan has been determined upon and is to be executed. But it supplies what does not exist in the law now—a tribunal other than Congress charged with the duty of originating and developing a satisfactory plan.

Secretary Taft adds:

3. In its present form the bill might be construed to curtail indirectly certain functions of the War Department, which is now charged with large discretion in waterway affairs. Possible ambiguity on this point should be removed.

Mr. Taft goes on and gives the history of the Engineer Corps of the Army and shows how it drifted into the control of our waterways.

Under the same long-standing arrangement—

it is the policy of the War Department to maintain a trained body of military engineers with a view to the national defense, and to keep these engineers in training in time of peace by detail to civil duty allied to their professional duty in time of war or military preparation; and it was carrying out this policy that the functions of the War Department pertaining to waterways have been more and more largely intrusted to the engineers of the army during the one hundred and ten years since the army and navy were separated in distinct departments. This policy has long been sustained by the Congress, although the military engineers have been prohibited from initiating projects or originating plans for meeting the growing needs of commerce. It is desirable to continue the policy of keeping the military engineers in training and at the same time rendering their skilled service available in work on waterways, although it is not necessary to vest them with the power of initiative, which they have not exercised in the past and which is, perhaps, inconsistent with their primary duty in connection with the military establishment of which they form a part. A provision that the Chief of Engineers of the Army shall be a member of the commission proposed to be created, and a further provision specifically covering the detail of military engineers to the service of the commission whenever such detail shall be consistent with their military duties, would remove any possible ambiguity and would be in accord with the custom and policy of the War Department.

Now, let me say here that that bill went much further than the amendment which I now propose. It organized an inland waterways commission absolutely separate from the War Department itself, though it made the Chief of Engineers of the Army the chairman of the commission; and that proposal was approved by Mr. Taft. This amendment leaves the entire work under the direction of the Corps of Engineers of the Army, but simply gives the President power to appoint in connection with it, on such board or boards as he may deem advisable, the chiefs of the related scientific services and the experts to whom I have referred, leaving the Corps of Engineers of the Army as the central and dominant figure of the entire organization.

THE WATERWAYS COMMISSIONS APPROVE.

Here also is the letter of the Inland Waterways Commission, signed by THEODORE E. BURTON, chairman, which, referring to this bill, states as follows:

1. Several of the leading provisions of the bill are in accord with the recommendations of the commission in a report submitted on February 3 last and transmitted to the Congress by the President on February 26. Among these are (a) the provision for coordination of navigation with related uses of the waters; (b) the provision for cooperation between the Federal Government, States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals; (c) the provision for correlating existing agencies in the Departments of War, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce and Labor in such manner as to secure effective administration; and (d) the provisions looking toward the control of running waters in such manner as to protect and promote navigation. In so far as these provisions are concerned, the bill has the unqualified approbation of the commission.

3. The general purpose of the bill is in harmony with the comprehensive plan for improving and developing the waterways of the country framed by the commission and approved by the President in his message of February 26 last.

It is fair to say that this expression was somewhat modified by General Mackenzie, Chief of the Engineer Corps, whose views, however, as I recall, accord with the modified provisions of the pending amendment.

I think the honored chairman of that committee, Mr. BURTON, will bear witness with me as to the intelligent service rendered by the chiefs of the scientific services of the country who were on that commission. I am sure that ever since my experience with them I have had a higher idea of their efficiency, their capacity, and their high public spirit. I know of no organization in a business way in the country that surpasses the scientific services of the country in integrity and in efficiency.

Now, this amendment does not do away at all with the functions of the existing National Waterways Commission, whose views, as expressed in a recent report, I think I am justified in saying, are in accord with this amendment. That is a joint commission of legislators, and composed, as it is, of Members of both the Senate and the House, it will perform the high functions of consulting with and hearing these various experts and boards with a view to submitting to Congress their recommendations; and with these thoroughly sifted recommendations it will be hardly possible for the Nation to go wrong in this great work.

LARGER POWERS DESIRABLE.

I wish to read, as embodying my individual views upon this matter, a short statement from the report of the Inland Waterways Commission—views which I have not sought to incorporate in this amendment because I fear that Congress as yet is not prepared to accept them. They are as follows:

I concur in the report of the commission, but desire to emphasize my belief that it is of the highest importance that in dealing with subjects relating to the respective powers, rights, and interests of the Nation, States, municipalities, corporations, and individuals, large powers and a comparatively free hand should be given to an administrative body of experts in the full development of projects, lest the complexity of the transactions, the time necessary to secure congressional approval, and difference of view as to purpose or method, may result in indecision and delay, the worst enemies of effective development.

An ample fund should be provided, to be reenforced from time to time either by legislative appropriation or by bond issue, and the administrative board, or commission, should be given the power, not only to investigate projects, but also, when determined to be feasible, to enter, with the approval of the President, upon their immediate execution; but the power should be limited so as to prevent such administrative body from entering into any contract unless there are sufficient unappropriated moneys in the fund to meet the cost thereof.

Unless some method of construction and development insuring prompt decision and execution and continuous and consecutive work by a body of experts is adopted, I fear that the best of projects may be wrecked in the shoals and quicksands of legislation.

Mr. President, I still adhere to those views. I feel sure, however, that in the present condition of mind of Congress it will be impossible for them to ripen into legislation, and all I ask in this amendment is that Congress should practically incorporate in this bill now a recommendation, which has been approved by the Inland Waterways Commission, by the National Waterways Commission, and by Mr. Taft himself, when Secretary of War.

CONSERVATION COMMISSION AND CONFERENCE OF GOVERNORS.

I wish to say just one word further. The Senate will recall that the Inland Waterways Commission suggested to the President the propriety of calling the conference of governors, and that just before that conference met the so-called "conservation commission," appointed by President Roosevelt, met, divided into four sections, relating to land, to water, to mines, and to forests. That commission consisted, besides legislators from both Houses, of eminent men, scientific men, engineers, and constructors appointed from every part of the country, and in it were a great number of men who constituted a part of the scientific services of the country. The work of that commission was mainly done by the members of these scientific services. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] presided over the section in that commission relating to waters, Representative DALZELL over the section relating to mines, Senator NELSON over the section relating to lands, and Senator SMOOT over the section relating to forests. The commission, as a whole, was presided over by Mr. Pinchot. The proceedings were purely executive. No newspaper reporters were there.

The sessions lasted four or five consecutive days. I have never known deliberative proceedings to be conducted with more logical sequence than those were conducted, mainly under the direction of prominent men connected with the scientific services of the country. Their statements and their treatises upon various subjects under consideration were brief and concise, and their conclusions, with certain modifications, were finally drawn up and constituted the basis of the report of the governors' conference; and if you will read over that report, unanimously acquiesced in by the governors of the great States, you will find the principles of coordination and of cooperation, such as are outlined in this amendment clearly sustained and vindicated.

I quote from the declaration of the governors, as follows:

We declare our firm conviction that this conservation of our natural resources is a subject of transcendent importance, which should engage unremittingly the attention of the Nation, the States, and the people in earnest cooperation. These natural resources include the land on which we live and which yields our food; the living waters which fertilize the soil, supply power, and form great avenues of commerce; the forests which yield the materials for our homes, prevent erosion of the soil, and conserve the navigation and other uses of the streams; and the minerals which form the basis of our industrial life, and supply us with heat, light, and power.

We agree that the land should be so used that erosion and soil wash shall cease; and that there should be reclamation of arid and semiarid regions by means of irrigation, and of swamp and overflowed regions by means of drainage; that the waters should be so conserved and used as to promote navigation, to enable the arid regions to be reclaimed by irrigation, and to develop power in the interests of the people; that the forests which regulate our rivers, support our industries, and promote the fertility and productiveness of the soil should be preserved and perpetuated; that the minerals found so abundantly beneath the surface should be so used as to prolong their utility; that the beauty, healthfulness, and habitability of our country should be preserved and increased; that the sources of national wealth exist for the benefit of the people, and that monopoly thereof should not be tolerated.

We commend the wise forethought of the President in sounding the note of warning as to the waste and exhaustion of the natural resources of the country, and signify our high appreciation of his action in calling this conference to consider the same and to seek remedies therefor through cooperation of the Nation and the States.

We agree that this cooperation should find expression in suitable action by the Congress within the limits of and coextensive with the national jurisdiction of the subject, and, complementary thereto, by the legislatures of the several States within the limits of and coextensive with their jurisdiction.

We declare the conviction that in the use of the national resources our independent States are interdependent and bound together by ties of mutual benefits, responsibilities, and duties.

* * * * * * *

We recognize in our waters a most valuable asset of the people of the United States, and we recommend the enactment of laws looking to the conservation of water resources for irrigation, water supply, power, and navigation, to the end that navigable and source streams may be brought under complete control and fully utilized for every purpose. We especially urge on the Federal Congress the immediate adoption of a wise, active, and thorough waterway policy, providing for the prompt improvement of our streams and the conservation of their watersheds required for the uses of commerce and the protection of the interests of our people.

THE TAWNEY AMENDMENT.

I wish to add one reason why this should be done. You will all recall that Congress was somewhat impatient toward the close of Mr. Roosevelt's administration, because of his liberal appointment of commissions without statutory sanction. His contention was that under his power of recommendation to Congress he had the power to call to his aid any men or any body of men for the purpose of advising him regarding matters which he proposed to submit to Congress. He sought later to have these commissions, which had not the sanction of statute, but were purely executive commissions, organized under the recommendatory power of the President, made statutory commissions. Congress did not acquiesce. But it went beyond that, and provided in the sundry civil act, section 9, what is known as the "Tawney amendment," as follows:

That hereafter no part of the public moneys, or of any appropriation heretofore or hereafter made by Congress, shall be used for the payment of compensation or expenses of any commission, council, board, or other similar body, or any members thereof, or for expenses in connection with any work or the results of any work or action of any commission, council, board, or other similar body, unless the creation of the same shall be or shall have been authorized by law; nor shall there be employed by detail, hereafter or heretofore made, or otherwise, personal services from any executive department or other government establishment in connection with any such commission, council, board, or other similar body.

Though it was probably not in the contemplation of the distinguished author of this amendment, it is at least a serious question to-day whether the President of the United States can bring together the members of the government services in an advisory board or council in relation to matters concerning which they have information and experience, and with reference to which he desires their judgment.

We have a case in Nevada, where the Truckee River irrigation project was under consideration, a river which takes its source in Lake Tahoe and which flows into Nevada, and which is now being utilized both for the reclamation of arid lands and the development of water power. The contention arose between the Reclamation Service and the Forest Service as to their jurisdiction and as to what principle should control in the development of forestry, of water power, and of reclamation, and appeal had been taken to the President. The river was an interstate river, partly in California and partly in Nevada; the lake was an interstate navigable lake. Thus the project involved three jurisdictions, that of the Engineer Corps of the Army as to the damming of a navigable lake, the Forest Service, and the Reclamation Service.

I urged the creation of a joint board consisting of the chiefs of the Reclamation and Forest services and of the Engineer Corps, who, with the aid of a civilian engineer of distinction and an officer of the Department of Justice, could thrash out all the difficulties and make report either unanimously or by majority and minority division by which the Secretary of the Interior or the President could be guided.

But it was at least doubtful under the terms of the Tawney amendment whether this could be done, and the President is compelled to proceed laboriously to enter into the contentions of divergent services, when, if they could only get together in a board or council, all dissensions would probably disappear, or, at all events, the points of difference would be so reduced as to make decision easy. So it seems to me that we should have some action upon this subject.

I am aware that I have taken more time than I intended in the development of this amendment. I thought I would present it in the RECORD for the consideration both of Members of the House and the Senate, notwithstanding the fact that the Commerce Committee of the Senate is soon to enter upon its deliberations. I think it would be an excellent thing if we could have, before the river and harbor bill is reported by the Committee on Commerce, some general discussion upon this subject, and I trust we shall have the privilege of listening to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], the chairman of the Inland Waterways Commission and the chairman of the National Waterways Commission, who is now also a member of the Commerce Committee of the Senate, and whose great familiarity with these subjects makes him a recognized authority.

Mr. President, I now ask that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMMONS in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I shall print as an appendix Senate bill 3717, introduced at this session of Congress, which is similar in its terms to Senate bill 500 of the Sixtieth Congress, first session, with reference to which Secretary Taft's letter, to which I have referred, was written:

In the Senate of the United States December 10, 1909, Mr. NEWLANDS introduced the following bill (S. 3717, 61st Cong.), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

"A bill (S. 3717) providing for the appointment of an inland waterway commission and for the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the country, with a view to the promotion of transportation between the States and with foreign countries.

"Be it enacted, etc., That a special fund shall be established in the Treasury, to be known as the inland waterway fund, to be used in the examination, survey, and development of the navigable inland waterways of the United States for the purpose of regulating, improving, and protecting interstate and foreign commerce; and the sum of $50,000,000 annually for each of the ten years following the 1st day of July, 1910, is hereby reserved, set aside, and appropriated as such fund.

"SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to cause to be examined surveys heretofore made and cause to be made additional examinations and surveys for the development of the navigable inland waterways of the United States, including the Great Lakes, the Mississippi River and its tributaries, the navigable rivers, bays, and sounds of the Gulf of Mexico and their tributaries, the navigable rivers, bays, and sounds of the Atlantic coast and their tributaries, the navigable rivers, bays, and sounds of the Pacific coast and their tributaries, and for the connection of such rivers, lakes, bays, and sounds with each other, wherever practicable and desirable, by connecting canals and by coastal canals, with a view to the promotion of transportation between such waterways by vessels of appropriate draft; and to investigate all questions relating to the development and improvement of the inland waterways of the United States, with a view to the promotion of interstate and foreign commerce; and in connection therewith and in aid thereof to consider and coordinate the questions of irrigation, swamp-land reclamation, clarification of streams, utilization of water power, prevention of soil waste, protection of forests, regulation of flow, control of floods, transfer facilities and sites, and the regulation and control thereof, for the better regulation and protection of interstate and foreign commerce, and such other questions regarding waterways as are related to the development of rivers, lakes, and canals for the purposes of commerce and navigation.

"SEC. 3. That in order to enable the President to make such examinations, surveys, and investigations, and to construct the works provided for by this act, he is authorized to appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, an Inland Waterway Commission, to be composed of not exceeding nine members, of which at least three members shall be detailed from the active or retired list of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, including the Chief of Engineers of the Army, and to bring in coordination therewith the Corps of Engineers of the Army, the Bureau of Soils, the Forest Service, the Bureau of Corporations, the Reclamation Service, and other branches of the public service related to waterways, and to appoint such experts and other persons and create such board or boards in connection therewith as the work may require, and to fix the salaries of all commissioners, experts, and other persons employed under this act, other than those who may now be officers or employees of the United States, until the same have been fixed by Congress. The President is authorized to detail military engineers to the service of the commission whenever such detail shall be consistent with their military duties: Provided, That no additional compensation shall be paid anyone otherwise receiving an official salary as an officer or employee of the United States, other than such necessary traveling expenses as may be approved by the chairman of the commission, and in the case of a retired officer an amount equal to difference between retired and full pay and allowances of grade.

"SEC. 4. That such commission shall make to the President annually, and at such other periods as may be required either by law or by the order of the President, full and complete reports of all their acts and doings and of all the moneys received and expended in the construction of works and in the performance of their duties in connection therewith, which reports shall be by the President transmitted to Congress; and such commission shall furthermore give to either House of Congress such information as may at any time be required, either by act of Congress or by order of either House of Congress.

"The President shall cause to be leased or otherwise provided for the use of the commissioners and other employees under this act such offices in the District of Columbia and elsewhere as may, with the suitable equipment of the same, be necessary and proper in his discretion for the proper discharge of their duties.

"SEC. 5. That if, after proper examination, survey, and estimate, such commission shall determine that any project for the improvement or construction of an inland waterway or coastal waterway is practicable and desirable for the better regulation, protection, and development of interstate and foreign commerce, such project, when authorized by Congress, may be executed in whole or in part through the proper agencies of the Government as now established by law.

"SEC. 6. That such projects may include such colateral works for the irrigation of arid lands, for the reclamation of swamp lands, for the conservation or replacement of forests, for the clarification of streams, control of floods, and for the development and utilization of water power as are in aid of navigation.

"SEC. 7. That such commission is authorized, with the approval of the President, and under such regulations and conditions as he may prescribe for the protection and future interests of the Government and people of the United States, to enter into cooperation with States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals in such collateral works as will aid in improving the navigability of the rivers and other waterways of the United States, and to make arrangements for the proportionate payment of the cost thereof out of the inland waterway fund and by the States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals benefited thereby, in such manner as to secure an equitable distribution of the costs and benefits.

"SEC. 8. That in carrying out the provisions of this act regard must be had, as far as practicable, to the equitable apportionment and contemporaneous execution of the projects contemplated under this act among the several waterway systems of the United States.

"SEC. 9. That the President is authorized, whenever the current revenues are insufficient to provide the $50,000,000 annually appropriated for the inland waterway fund, to make up the deficiency in such fund by the issue and sale of United States bonds, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent per annum, payable semiannually and running for a period of not exceeding thirty years."

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, after consulting with Senators having in charge important matters of legislation, it appears that no harm will come to the public business from an adjournment over until Monday, and I therefore move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

REGULATION OF FEDERAL COURT PRACTICE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

The bill (S. 3724) regulating injunctions and the practice of the district and circuit courts of the United States was announced as the first bill in order on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

ARLINGTON MEMORIAL BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 1630) to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from Washington to the Arlington property was announced as the next business in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it go over also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over under objection by the Senator from New Hampshire.

GOVERNMENT OF HAWAII.

The bill (S. 3360) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 13, 1900, was announced as the next business in order.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho the bill will go over without prejudice.

GOVERNMENT OF ALASKA.

The bill (S. 5436) to create a legislative council for the district of Alaska, to confer legislative powers thereon, and for other purposes, was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it go over.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Indiana is not here. I desire to make a motion that the bill go over under Rule IX. I will refrain from doing so, however, until the Senator from Indiana is present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over without prejudice upon the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

WALES ISLAND PACKING COMPANY.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move to amend the bill by striking out lines 23 and 24, on page 8, and lines 1 and 2, on page 9, in the following words:

The name of William H. Hanscom, late of First and Ninth Batteries, Massachusetts Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The beneficiary mentioned has died since the bill was reported.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT YANKTON, S. DAK.

The bill (S. 6229) to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Missouri River at Yankton, S. Dak., by the Yankton, Norfolk and Southern Railway Company, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DONATION OF CANNON TO GEORGIA.

Mr. CLAY. This morning in my absence a joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. If I had been present I would have asked for its immediate consideration when it was reported. There will be no objection to it. It is the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 111) to donate a brass cannon to the State of Georgia. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not object to present consideration of the joint resolution nor to the resolution itself, but I think I ought to say that a law passed a year ago closed the door to the general practice of donating obsolete brass or bronze cannon. This, however, is an entirely different matter. It is a trophy cannon that has already been devoted to the use, as I understand it, to which this will be devoted, or nearly the same. I make this explanation merely because the Military Affairs Committee has been compelled to refrain from the indorsement of many bills that have been introduced, because of the law which prevents the donation of cannon in other cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COPPER RIVER BRIDGE, ALASKA.

The bill (S. 6286) to authorize the Copper River and Northwestern Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Copper River, in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Nevada," to strike out the words "its successors and assigns, be, and are" and to insert the word "is;" in line 9, after the word "River," to insert "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation;" and on page 2, line 3, after the word "Railway," to strike out the words "to be approved by the Secretary of War," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Copper River and Northwestern Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Nevada, is hereby authorized to construct, operate, and maintain a bridge and its approaches thereto across the Copper River, in the district of Alaska, below the mouth of the Kotsina River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, about 1½ miles north of the mouth of the Chitina River, on said company's line of railroad designated and generally known as the Chitina Branch of the Copper River and Northwestern Railway, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906; and are further authorized to construct, operate, and maintain a temporary bridge at or near the same point, to be removed upon the completion of the bridge first above referred to.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL AIDS TO NAVIGATION.

The bill (S. 5007) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate for a light and fog signal at Kellett Bluff, Washington, at a cost not to exceed $30,000; for a light-vessel at Partridge Point, Washington, at a cost not to exceed $60,000; for a light-house tender for Alaska, at a cost not to exceed $225,000; and for aids to navigation on Puget Sound, Washington, at a cost not to exceed $250,000.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 2, line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two hundred and fifty thousand" and insert "forty-one thousand six hundred," so as to read:

Aids to navigation on Puget Sound, Washington, at a cost not to exceed $41,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAM LAUNCHES IN PUGET SOUND.

The bill (S. 5268) providing for the construction of two steam launches for the United States Revenue-Cutter Service for duty in the waters of Puget Sound was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to have constructed two steam launches for the United States Revenue-Cutter Service for duty in the waters of Puget Sound to replace the launches Guard and Scout, at a cost not to exceed $70,000; and appropriates $70,000 for that purpose.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHICKAMAUGA NATIONAL MILITARY PARK.

The bill (S. 5851) to amend an act approved August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to establish a national military park at the battlefield of Chickamauga," was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 5 of the act approved August 19, 1890, so as to read:

SEC. 5. That the affairs of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park shall, subject to the supervision and direction of the Secretary of War, be in charge of three commissioners, to be appointed by the Secretary of War, each of whom shall have actively participated in the battle of Chickamauga, or in one of the battles about Chattanooga; one of whom, upon designation by the Secretary of War, shall act as chairman and another as secretary of the commission. The said commissioners shall have an office in Chattanooga, Tenn., and shall receive compensation at the rate of $300 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMPSON B. POLLARD.

The bill (S. 5075) granting an honorable discharge to Thompson B. Pollard was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that Thompson B. Pollard shall hereafter be held to have been honorably discharged as a second lieutenant of Battery D, First New Jersey Light Artillery Volunteers, on February 19, 1864, and that an honorable discharge be issued to him by the Secretary of War in accordance with this act. But no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PHILIPPINE SCOUTS.

The bill (S. 1027) for the reimbursement of certain sums of money to certain enlisted men of the Philippine Scouts was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $3,000, to enable the enlisted men of the Philippine Scouts to be reimbursed for certain sums of money intrusted by them to Lieut. Andrew Shea, Philippine Scouts, for safekeeping and for transmission to their families in the Philippine Islands, which sums were embezzled by Shea and fraudulently converted to his own use.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JUAN TORROELLA Y ROONEY.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 74) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy Mr. Juan Torroella y Rooney, of Cuba, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5787) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make allotment to Frank H. Pequette was announced as next in order.

Mr. BROWN. I ask that this bill may go over, and also the one following it on the calendar, the bill (S. 5788) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make allotments within national forests.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bills will go over.

G. R. CASWELL LUMBER COMPANY, OF VERMONT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 371), which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State relative to the claim of the G. R. Caswell Lumber Company, an American concern of Vermont, and Mr. W. K. Baldwin, a resident of Quebec, for losses sustained by reason of a fire which started in June, 1907, for legitimate purposes by a surveying party in the employ of the International Boundary Commission while engaged in placing monuments along the boundary between the State of Vermont and the Province of Quebec, got beyond control, and burned over an area of 145 acres in Vermont and Quebec.

It will be seen from the report that the claim of the Caswell Lumber Company amounts to $312.30 and that of Mr. Baldwin to $125, the amount of both claims being $437.30; that it was agreed between the Canadian government and the Department of State to recommend that the owners of the burned-over district be compensated as a matter of equity, the total amount to be borne equally by the United States and Canada, and that the government of Canada has already paid its one-half, out of which Mr. Baldwin's claim of $125 has been satisfied.

In accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State, the Congress is requested, as a matter of justice and equity, to appropriate the sum of $218.65, to be placed at the disposal of the Secretary of State in order that it may be added to the balance of $93.65 paid by the government of Canada and a full settlement of the claim of the Caswell Lumber Company reached.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 18, 1910.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 18, 1910.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

JOSEPH J. SINNOTT.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the resolution (H. Res. 401) which is at the Clerk's desk, being a privileged report (No. 493) from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia calls up a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 401, in lieu of House resolution 27.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided for by law, compensation at the rate of $1,800 per annum to Joseph J. Sinnott for services as special messenger and assistant pair clerk to the minority, said office and compensation to be in lieu of one special messenger now authorized at $1,500 per annum; and to said Sinnott there shall be paid out of the contingent fund an amount equal to the rate of $300 per annum, from and including March 17, 1909, until the date of the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, as I recall, this is practically the same thing we did last year.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. That amendment was offered by the chairman of the Democratic caucus on the 15th of March to carry out what was asked to be done by the Democratic caucus relative to this assistant pair clerk, and at the suggestion of Mr. PAYNE, the leader of the majority, it has taken this course. The resolution was introduced and referred to the Committee on Accounts, and this is the report from that committee upon the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Has this employee ever received this increase of salary before?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. No.

Mr. MANN. This is an increase?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes. He performs the services of pair clerk, and is one of the most efficient men on our side, or on either side.

Mr. MANN. I recall the case now.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

MESSENGER AND JANITOR TO THE COMMITTEE ON DISPOSITION OF PAPERS IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 399) from the Committee on Accounts. (Report No. 491.)

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 399, in lieu of House resolution 221.

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, compensation at the rate of $60 per month for the services of a messenger, who shall also act as janitor, to the Committee on Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments during the regular sessions of the Sixty-first Congress, to commence from the time he entered upon the discharge of his duties, which shall be ascertained and evidenced by the certificate of the chairman of said committee.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ASSISTANT CLERK, COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 400) from the Committee on Accounts. (Report No. 492.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire offers a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

House resolution 400, in lieu of House resolution 328.

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, compensation at the rate of $6 per day for the services of an assistant clerk to the Committee on Enrolled Bills during the present session, payment to commence from the time such clerk entered upon the discharge of his duties, which shall be ascertained and evidenced by the certificate of the chairman of said committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, is this an extraordinary office that is being created?

Mr. CURRIER. This is a position that we give at about this time in the session every year. The man is now at work.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is needed for the public good, is it?

Mr. CURRIER. So the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills states.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

HARRY B. SMITH.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I also offer the following resolution (H. Res. 382). (Report No. 490.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire offers a resolution from the Committee on Accounts, which the Clerk will report.

House resolution 382.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Harry B. Smith, the sum of $17.86, being the amount due him as clerk-hire allowance for services rendered the late Hon. William C. Lovering, a Representative from Massachusetts, from February 1 to February 4, 1910, inclusive.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURRIER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to call the attention of the House to something that I think is wrong in its practice. I introduced this resolution. It has been reported just in the form that I introduced it. It pays the clerk of the late Mr. Lovering up to the day of Mr.

Lovering's death. That is to say, it pays him for four days in February. Now, that is the universal practice of this House. We never pay a clerk for a single day beyond the date of the death of the Member who employed him.

But our practice is entirely wrong, Mr. Speaker. Merely because a man dies, his district does not die. During the time which expires before a successor is elected there should be some provision for payment for the performance of the necessary work for that district. I know something myself about the business of the fourteenth Massachusetts district, because I have had occasion to investigate it lately. There is no way to carry on the business of that district; there is no way to attend to its river and harbor matters, its public-building matters, its pension business, or anything else. No one can be paid to do the work, because Congress will make no provision for his payment.

Now, I know we can not expect the House to alter this practice until the matter has been called to its attention. I have taken the floor merely to point out to the members of the Committee on Accounts and to the House generally that our practice as it now stands is a mistake. I hope that in the future some means will be found to relieve such situations.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman. I will say that this can all be obviated if the House would do what it ought to do, namely, put the secretaries of Members upon the roll of the House—that is, to permit the Member to nominate his secretary, and that secretary shall remain, so long as he is designated as secretary, on the roll of the House and become an officer of it and paid directly. We have had quite a few cases, I will say, coming up in the Committee on Accounts, where the same circumstances existed, and one case where the secretary to a Member who had died stayed here for six months, until the election, and attended to all the business of his district, and we could not give any relief.

They ought to go on the roll of the House like they do in the Senate. In the Senate the private secretaries to Senators not only are on the roll, but they receive $1,800 and also an extra month's pay whenever we pass at the end of a session a provision giving the employees of the House and Senate an extra month's salary. The Members of the House have it in their power to change this rule so as to prevent this injustice, if they will vote for such a proposition; and I think we can get it out of the Committee on Accounts. The Members can vote for a proposition to the effect that the secretaries to the Members of the House shall be treated as they are in the Senate, go upon the roll of the House, and the salary, instead of being paid to the Member, be paid to the secretary. [Applause.]

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

THE LATE A. B. TALCOTT.

Mr. CURRIER. I also present the following resolution. (Report No. 489.)

House resolution 335.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Doretta F. Talcott, widow of A. B. Talcott, late electrician in the heating and ventilating department of the House of Representatives, an amount equal to six months of his salary, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray the funeral expenses of said A. B. Talcott.

Mr. CURRIER. I ask for a vote.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CURRIER, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the various resolutions were agreed to was laid on the table.

MEMORIAL EXERCISES ON HON. A. J. M'LAURIN.

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Speaker, at a former day of this session resolutions were presented to the House announcing the death of Hon. A. J. McLAURIN, late a Senator from the State of Mississippi; and it was stated at that time that at a future period a day would be set apart for memorial exercises. In that connection I desire to present the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That there be a session of the House on Sunday, the 13th day of March, at 12 o'clock, to be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. A. J. McLAURIN, late a Senator from the State of Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

JOHN W. DULA.

The Speaker laid before the House the bill (H. R. 13145) for the relief of John W. Dula, with Senate amendments, which were read.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

J. A. DENNY.

Mr. COWLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw report No. 243, accompanying the bill H. R. 9447, and substitute another report.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What bill is it?

The SPEAKER. We will ascertain in a moment. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9447) for the relief of J. A. Denny.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to withdraw the report and substitute another report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LAW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar under the rule.

Mr. MANN. You might do better to consider these things in the House.

Mr. LAW. Well, Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw that motion for a moment, in order to ask unanimous consent that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the Private Calendar under the rule as in the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MANN. Suppose you make it business reported from the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on War Claims be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. Of course that would include resolutions.

The SPEAKER. That includes resolutions. Is there objection?

Mr. PRINCE. I will make objection for the moment, or reserve it. As I understand this motion, it will apply only to private claims reported by the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. That is the request.

Mr. PRINCE. That is the request; and if the motion that the gentleman has made were put to the House, after the War Claims work had been completed, it would then leave it so that the other private claims could come up under the rule. I will ask the gentleman what is the necessity for making this kind of a motion? If there is a good reason for it, I do not want to object.

Mr. LAW. Mr. Speaker, I will say that all the business on the Private Calendar reported by the Committee on War Claims consists of Tucker Act resolutions, and the purpose of the request for this manner of considering them is simply to save the time of the House. It is probable that they can be disposed of in this way in about one-half of the time. If the House gets through with the consideration of these Tucker Act resolutions, why then there is no reason whatever why the gentleman from Illinois, if he desires to do so, can not make a motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of other bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MANN. I will say to my colleague that if these resolutions are considered in Committee of the Whole, and then have to be considered in the House when reported from the Committee of the Whole House, undoubtedly it will take all the afternoon. The mere reading of the resolutions will take a long time, and it would be duplicated to some extent in returning to the House. Of course this request would not shut out the right of my colleague to go into Committee of the Whole, although I hope that motion will not be made to-day.

Mr. PRINCE. I would rather have the motion amended so that we consider these resolutions also in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the rule, and not have the motion made that it is limited to war claims.

Mr. MANN. What good would that do? After considering the war claims resolutions, the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee, I think would undoubtedly move to rise and report those resolutions back to the House, and it would take the balance of the day to consider them in the House, even if they were only to be read by title.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PRINCE. I do not care to press the objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will report the first bill on the calendar.

FREDERICK BARTEMEYER, DECEASED.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 201) referring the bill (H. R. 712) for the relief of the legal representatives of Frederick Bartemeyer, deceased, to the Court of Claims.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 712) for the relief of the legal representatives of Frederick Bartemeyer, deceased, with all the accompanying papers be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

Mr. LAW. Mr. Speaker, this is simply a claim for stores and supplies, the facts of which have never been adjudicated in any tribunal where there was an opportunity for cross-examination. Therefore the bill is referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LAW. Yes.

Mr. MANN. There are a large number of these Tucker Act resolutions upon the calendar, reported from the Committee on War Claims. Of course it is quite impossible, either from the resolution or the report upon the resolution, to gain any information. I am not making any criticism of that. Will the gentleman inform the House whether, in supporting these resolutions, the Committee on War Claims, or somebody in connection with them, gives consideration to the possible or probable merits of the bill, or does the committee report a Tucker Act resolution upon any bill that happens to be referred to it relating to war claims?

Mr. LAW. Great care has been exercised in selecting the bills to be reported under the Tucker Act. The gentleman from Illinois will bear in mind that the present Committee on War Claims inherited something like 808 Tucker Act resolutions that were in the Tucker Act omnibus resolution in the last Congress that did not pass. A great many have been turned down in the committee, because it was not thought proper that they should be reported. I will say, in addition to that, that every one of them has been examined by the expert of the committee and by at least one member of the committee besides the chairman.

Mr. MANN. This all might as well be discussed now as at any other time, so I will ask another question. The gentleman knows that the judges of the Court of Claims have for some time been of the opinion that they ought to have greater power in making findings to report to Congress, and that the Attorney-General in his annual report recommended that increased authority be given to the Court of Claims in making its findings. Will the gentleman inform us as to what the situation is as to that bill now?

Mr. LAW. The Attorney-General, upon the suggestion of the judges of the Court of Claims, recommended that the following addition be made to section 14 of the Tucker Act:

Together with such conclusions as shall be sufficient to inform Congress of the nature and character of the demand, either as a claim legal or equitable, or as a gratuity against the United States.

A bill so amending the Tucker Act was introduced in January by my colleague [Mr. BENNET of New York] and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I personally appeared before the subcommittee, composed of six members, and advocated that bill. I am informed that it was reported out of the subcommittee favorably on yesterday. There was a meeting of the Committee on the Judiciary this morning, but whether favorable action was taken by the full committee I can not say. I have not learned.

Mr. MANN. I am informed that the full committee did not act upon the proposition this morning, but I assume that they are likely to, and that bill may be passed, as far as the House is concerned, at any time.

Mr. LAW. There is no possible objection to the amendment. It ought to go through, and I believe it will.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I will say in that connection that I happen to be a member of both those committees, War Claims and the Judiciary, and this proposition, I think, meets with the approval of every member of each committee.

Mr. LAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LAW. Mr. Speaker, in order to save time, I ask unanimous consent that the balance of the House resolutions from the Committee on War Claims be read by title. The reason I ask is that all the resolutions are identical except as to the number of the bills and the names of the claimants, both of which appear in the titles of the resolutions. Therefore the reading of the resolutions would convey no additional information to the House.

The SPEAKER. Ordinarily——

Mr. MANN. I would have to object to that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects. The Clerk will report the next resolution.

LUCY MOORE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 202) referring the bill (H. R. 1431) for the relief of Lucy Moore, widow, and the heirs of W. P. Moore, deceased, to the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 1431) for the relief of Lucy Moore, widow, and the heirs of W. P. Moore, deceased, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOHN M'ANULTY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 203) referring the bill (H. R. 1764) for the relief of the heirs of John McAnulty, deceased, to the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 1764) for the relief of the heirs of John McAnulty, deceased, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

The resolution was agreed to.

JAMES S. FORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 204) referring the bill (H. R. 1766) for the relief of the estate of James S. Ford, deceased, to the Court of Claims.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. This seems to complete the calendar.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And pending that motion, I move that all general debate on the bill terminate in thirty-three minutes; and upon that question I ask for the previous question.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I want to ask the gentleman a question, if I may be permitted.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I wanted to ask, if there was no objection, this question: Will not the gentleman withdraw that motion for the previous question? Some of us on this side want to talk a few minutes. I would like to do so myself.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will have to demand the regular order. I can not consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the regular order.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. A parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I want to know if this is a part of the plan and purpose to shut off all debate in the House?

The SPEAKER. That is hardly a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair can not answer, because the Chair can not look into the minds of Members and ascertain what is their purpose.

The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was put.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I want to vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have an opportunity.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HARDWICK and Mr. GARRETT. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes, 109; noes, 76.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point that there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors——

Mr. MANN. The Chair has not declared that there is not a quorum.

The SPEAKER. Oh, yes; 109 in the affirmative, 76 in the negative.

Mr. MANN. That was the vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is not a quorum present.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. If the Chair will indulge me one moment in the interest of dispatching public business—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Can not we have a few minutes for debate instead of consuming this time?

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent members; as many as are in favor of ordering the previous question will, as their names are called, answer "yea;" those opposed will answer "nay;" those present and not voting will answer "present;" and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 157, nays 123, answered "present" 19, not voting 88, as follows:

Mr. BENNET of New York with Mr. HARRISON.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire if the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CAPRON] voted?

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Then I wish to withdraw my vote and to vote "present."

The Clerk called the name of Mr. O'CONNELL, and he voted "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the previous question is ordered. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota to close debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 19028) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall not avail myself of the opportunity to indulge in general debate on this bill. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HENRY W. PALMER].

Mr. HENRY W. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree in substance or conclusion with the argument of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], who yesterday addressed the committee on the subject of immigration and immigrants.

He must have forgotten that of all the teeming millions who make up the population of the United States the most energetic, prosperous, and progressive on the earth, a large proportion are of foreign birth, and that they are among the most deserving and valuable of our citizens.

It has been said, not without the truth, that the Latin races are decadent and decaying; that the Anglo-Saxon is gorged by prosperity; and that the Slav is the only man left who is willing to fight and die for his religion. Be that as it may, I am sure that the Slavs, the Poles, the Lithuanians, and the Hungarians, who are not Slavs, who seek the land of the free to better their conditions, do not deserve denunciations, but rather encouragement.

The very autonomy of Poland has been destroyed and her territory divided among the foes. Her unhappy citizens come to this fair country intending to make it their home. They acquire land, build houses, organize societies, churches, and schools, and in the third generation become thoroughly identified with our institutions, customs, and habits, so that it is difficult to distinguish them from the native-born Americans.

They are good citizens, thoroughly patriotic, and reliable in peace and war. I have no sympathy with the disposition that would forbid the oppressed from anywhere an asylum and refuge under the tree of liberty.

The same statement may be made on the part of our Italian immigrants. The flourishing Italian settlements scattered over the United States bear witness to the truth that for a large part they come to make homes, renouncing their allegiance to all foreign princes, potentates, and powers. The time is not very remote when we were all foreigners and when this broad heritage of freedom was possessed, if not owned, by the Indian, whose appropriation bill is now on its passage to-day.

Civilization has pushed him back until he has become the ward of the nation, fed by her bounty. Let us not add to the wrongs done the Indians by contempt for our foreign-born citizens who have come to take part in building up the great Republic and to participate in the heritage of freedom. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the following letter from the Attorney-General.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 17, 1910.

Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. LONGWORTH: I observe in the newspapers this morning the statement that Representative MANN criticised Mr. Wade H. Ellis, assistant to the Attorney-General, yesterday quite severely because of a letter written by Mr. Ellis to Chairman Parker, of the Judiciary Committee of the House, regarding the judgeships in Ohio.

I beg to say that the letter was prepared in the department after the usual inquiry in response to a request from the Judiciary Committee for the expression of an opinion as to the desirability of the enactment of the bill, and that I should have signed the letter myself, but that I was called out of the department before it was ready for signature; and, understanding that Mr. Parker desired it to be sent to the House as early as possible, I left directions that Mr. Ellis be requested to sign it as Acting Attorney-General. This was his sole connection with the bill.

In view of the comments made upon his action by Mr. MANN, I think it is due to him that this explanation should be made.

Very respectfully,

GEO. W. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney-General.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman proceeds I would like to inquire whether he thinks the Attorney-General of the United States has a right to send a letter to be read in the House calling attention to what has been said in debate. Perhaps he needs to interpret the Constitution as well as Mr. Ellis.

Mr. KEIFER. He has a perfect right to do it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the Attorney-General has a perfect right to address a letter to a Member of the House. I have had the letter read on my own responsibility. This letter simply shows, and it ought to be shown, that Mr. Ellis in writing the letter, requested by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, acted in an entirely proper way and solely in his capacity as an official of the Department of Justice.

I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Illinois, in view of this statement, as a fair-minded man, will acknowledge that he made a mistake the other day in making this attack on Mr. Ellis.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois is one of the most useful Members of this House. [Applause.] He is an indefatigable and untiring worker, and his efforts usually make for good legislation. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois undertakes to play the rôle of Hamlet in this House, and he does it with skill, grace, and tact, and I think that no one will begrudge him that rôle, but when, Mr. Chairman, he undertakes not only to play Hamlet, but Ophelia and the king and the queen and first grave digger, and sometimes carries the spear, he is liable to make mistakes. [Laughter.]

There is such a thing, Mr. Chairman, as excessive activity, and, as in the case of the athlete, sometimes the brain worker may become overtrained. [Laughter.] I think that the speech of the gentleman from Illinois the other day showed symptoms of overtraining.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have only a few moments, and I am about to close. I think the gentleman from Illinois merely made a mistake; and that being an exception to the general rule, it simply goes to prove that he is one of the most useful Members in the House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time and the remainder of the time for general debate to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for twenty-seven and one-half minutes.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago I caused to be read from the Clerk's desk a short telegram clipped from the St. Louis Republic, which stated in substance that as a result of high-tariff rates the prices of Bibles had advanced, and would still further advance on March 1, to a point so high as to practically exclude them from the homes of poor people.

I ventured to indulge in a few innocent comments upon that newspaper article, condemning the Republican party for writing into our statutes a law which threatens to withdraw from the homes of American citizens that most valuable and sacred of all books.

It did not occur to me at the moment that even the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COLE] had so little reverence for the Bible as to attempt to defend and justify his party action.

True, the gentleman's political party finds no solace within the lids of the Holy Bible. Its every precept condemns the old party. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] Why, sir, the Republican party has been in a state of insurrection and open rebellion against the teachings of the Bible ever since that memorable occasion when the Lord of Hosts thundered forth from Mount Sinai that great command. "Thou shalt not steal." [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

History repeats itself. I believe we had high-protection Republicans on earth two thousand years ago. I think old Dives was a protectionist and that Lazarus was a tariff-for-revenue Democrat. Dives was a man of great riches; Lazarus was poor. Dives lived in a splendid mansion, was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day; Lazarus had not where to lay his head, was clad in tatters and rags, and fed upon the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table. Dives doubtless contributed princely sums to Republican campaign boodle funds; Lazarus could give nothing. But we have the assurance of Holy Writ that when they died the spirit of Lazarus was borne aloft on angel wings to the God who gave it, while old Dives was cast into hell. My friends on the other side of the aisle, I beg you to heed the warning. History may again repeat itself. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

When I resumed my seat after commenting on that newspaper article the other day, to my surprise and momentary chagrin, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COLE] sprung to the defense of the Republican party and its creature—the Payne-Aldrich bill—that harbinger of woe and want, of toil and tears, of doubt and despair, of sorrow and suffering; that hideous, miserable deformity; that accursed, ill-shapen monstrosity, the natural and inevitable result of the unholy and illicit relations of the Grand Old Party with bad trusts. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] He unarmed me with his fervid and impetuous eloquence; intimidated me with his fast, furious, and vehement gestures; and then, figuratively speaking, walked all over my prostrate form. With unconcealed pride and evident consciousness of his mighty triumph he held aloft a newspaper article containing a summary of importations of certain goods on the free list, including hides and skins.

After a brief exploration of the regions above he returned to earth shouting vociferously—

> Let us take the question of hides and skins, $104,000,000 worth, and if that is not a necessity that goes into the home of every American workingman, I would like to know what it is.

What, "hides and skins" a necessity that goes into the home of every American workingman! No. I am almost forced to conclude that—> judgment has fled to brutish beasts and men have lost their reason—

When such arguments are advanced. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

How does the gentleman from Ohio take his hides—raw, green, dried, salted, or pickled? [Laughter.] Not the millions of American workingmen, but the tanners get free hides and skins, and the manufacturers sell the finished product at extortionate prices to your constituents and mine. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman seemed to rejoice in the fact that hides and skins are on the free list. A change has evidently come over the spirit of his dream. Since when was he converted? Last April he wanted to put a tax on hides.

The Payne bill as reported to the House carried hides on the free list. On April 9, 1909, while that bill was under consideration, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] offered this amendment:

> Hides of cattle, raw or uncured, whether dried, salted, or pickled, 10 per cent ad valorem—

And demanded a vote by yeas and nays. Strange to say, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COLE] voted for the Scott amendment—voted to put a tax of 10 per cent ad valorem on hides. Hides were as much a "necessity" last April as now. I voted for free hides; why did not the gentleman vote then as he preaches now? Has he seen a new light? I fear he is in the predicament that Claudius, King of Denmark, found himself when he said:

> My words fly up, my thoughts remain below,
> Words without thoughts never to Heaven go.

[Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Shoes, harness, and other products of leather are necessities which in truth do enter into the homes of all the people. Why did not the gentleman from Ohio and his colleagues vote for cheaper shoes for the working men, women, and children of their districts, and for the millions of poor men, women, and children throughout the land? Why did they not vote for cheaper harness in the interest of American farmers, those horny-handed sons of toil who have produced the wealth of this Republic, and whose brawn and muscle and patriotism have made it the grandest, the richest, and the most glorious country under the shining sun? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

On April 9, 1909, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the minority leader, moved to recommit the tariff bill, with instructions to the committee to report it back at an early day with this among other amendments:

> Seventh. Amend by placing leather, harness, boots, shoes, and all other products of leather, on the free list.

A roll call was had on this motion, and the gentleman from Ohio voted against putting these articles of "necessity that go into the home of every American workingman" on the free list.

With the price of shoes going higher and higher every day; with the cost of clothing bounding skyward; with harness and all products of leather on the rampage; with the unprecedented and phenomenal increase in living expenses; with tens of thousands of oppressed and suffering citizens appealing to the President of the United States for relief; with the old party embarrassed by shortages, frauds, embezzlements, and general incompetency, these conditions all tend to make "confusion worse confounded" for you Republicans. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I fancy the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, together with many of his colleagues, before the ides of next November will have occasion, in the language of King Richard the Third, to cry out in the anguish of their souls:

> My conscience hath a thousand sev'ral tongues,
> And ev'ry tongue brings in a sev'ral tale,
> And ev'ry tale condemns me for—my vote on the tariff bill. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

The Republican Senate took hides off the free list, where the House placed them, and restored the Dingley rate of 15 per cent ad valorem, and also increased the rates on boots, shoes, and other products of leather.

In this shape the bill went to conference. When it became notorious that the party recently intrusted with power had deliberately and willfully determined to ignore, violate, repudiate, and cast to the winds its solemn platform pledge to revise the tariff downward, the President flourished the "big stick," so often and so effectively used by his predecessor, and demanded of the conferees that they reduce the rates on boots, shoes, and other leather goods, and give the grand old party free hides to wrap about its putrifying and dying carcass [laughter on the Democratic side] to shield it from the righteous assaults of a betrayed and infuriated people. Do not you Republicans wish, way down in your anatomies where human hearts ought to be [laughter], that the President had brandished his big stick once more and compelled you to vote for free boots, shoes, and harness as well as free hides?

The tariff issue is not settled. It requires more than mere executive indorsement to convince American consumers that the highest tariff we ever had is the best. I pray the Omnipotent One, in His infinite goodness, to have compassion on us and spare our country another like affliction.

You solemnly promised downward revision, but gave us upward revision. At the behests of special interests, like the cowards you are, you deserted the people who confided in, who trusted, and who honored you, and, to the everlasting shame, humiliation, and disgrace of a once great political party, you surrendered them to the merciless, remorseless, and conscienceless trusts of the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You will utterly fail to deceive the public by the hypocritical pretense that you increased the rates of duty on luxuries and decreased them on the common necessities of life. Neither can you woo and win the confidence of the masses nor calm the raging seas of discontent with siren songs dedicated to articles on the free list. True, the free list is a marvel of perfection; a splendid monument to Republican patriotism and statesmanship. It is the product of the combined wisdom of your party, and it defines your ideas of common honesty and a square deal.

Blankets are heavily taxed; hence I presume they are classed as luxuries. The cheaper the blanket the higher the rate of tariff. This is an unfair discrimination against the poor which can not be justified. The rich, who buy high-priced blankets, pay only 71 per cent to monopoly, while the poor, who buy the cheapest blankets or none, are compelled to give 165 per cent ad valorem to appease the insatiate appetite of greed. [Applause on the Democratic side.] For every dollar of actual value they are required to pay $1.65 for tribute.

By the use of the taxing power of government the Republican party has practically excluded blankets from the homes of the poor and robbed millions of good citizens of one of the comforts of life.

With such a burdensome tariff on blankets, the Republican party, realizing it must do something to win the gratitude and secure the votes of the millions whom it has oppressed, has graciously and generously placed on the free list an article of universal use—an indispensable article in every American household—and that is dragon's blood. No well-regulated family should be without dragon's blood, and I am glad it is as free as the air we breathe. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Cheap flannels, like cheap blankets, are taxed higher than the costlier grades. But flannel is treated and taxed as a luxury, and poor people know, or must learn, that while the Republican party is in power they have no right to indulge in luxuries. I rather think the country should tolerate and endure, without complaint, the very small tax of only 143 per cent ad valorem on flannels just as long as a wise, beneficent, and patriotic party responds to pathetic appeals from millions of homes asking and begging for free divi-divi. Everybody uses and must have this prime necessity of life; children cry for it.

Breathes there a man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said,
Give me my divi-divi free, or give me death.

[Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Clothing is an expensive luxury these days. The old party stood pat on Dingley rates and left ready-made clothing taxed at only 76.59 per cent ad valorem—a very moderate rate when we consider that all persons, rich and poor, indulge in the luxury of wearing clothes. The latest available statistics show that in 1907 we imported ready-made clothing to the value of over $1,000,000. By reason of the tariff this value was automatically increased $760,000 as soon as the goods crossed our border, thus forcing consumers to pay $1,760,000 for the imported goods, and, by reflex operation of law, to bear an additional burden of over 76 per cent ad valorem on all domestic ready-made clothing.

But, my friends, you can with characteristic Republican duplicity say to your murmuring constituent this fall—

for while it is true that we have bound you hand and foot, and invited rich manufacturers to rob, pillage, and plunder you, we have not forgotten our solemn duty to the millions of American citizens who consume the every-day necessities of life. Tell them truly that you patriotic statesmen knew the price of clothing would be exorbitant; that food products would go beyond the reach of the poor; that even in the great city of Chicago thousands of little boys and girls would nightly retire to humble couches suffering with hunger. Tell them, also, that as a panacea for high-priced food and raiment you have placed on the free list two great household necessities—dried blood and fishskins. Great is the Republican party, and great will be the fall thereof. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The Payne-Aldrich bill increases the tariff on ladies' stockings to 86 per cent ad valorem. I shall not even criticise the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] for this ungallant discrimination against American beauties. [Laughter.] He convinced me that he is a true friend to the ladies and not really opposed to their wearing stockings, provided they can afford them, when he made that gallant and successful fight which secured to our mothers, our wives, and our sweethearts the right to have and enjoy forever free stuffed birds, provided the darned things are not fit for any kind of use. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The American citizen who cares to indulge in the luxury of wearing a wool hat must pay a tribute of 86 per cent ad valorem for the privilege. But against this unjust and oppressive tax we point with pride to the fact, thanks to the Republican party, that it is possible for us, without paying tribute to any trust, to enjoy one of the most sacred gifts of God to man—free fossils. [Laughter.] Republican fossils outfossil all the fossils in the universe.

Revenues must be raised to defray the enormous and rapidly increasing expenses of government. The Republican party claims—and we should try to believe it—that it favors a high tariff on luxuries and a lower tariff on the necessities of life, both along protection lines.

Sugar must be regarded as a luxury, used only by the very rich, because it is heavily taxed.

In 1907 we imported sugar to the value of $91,818,829, and the rich people who consumed it paid to the custom-house officials duties aggregating $60,134,181. A portion of this vast sum found its way into the Treasury of the United States, while the balance was stolen by Republicans in charge of the custom-house. Just how much was stolen only the Lord and Republican officials know. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Perhaps they would have stolen it all if the men higher up had been more liberal with those lower down. But it is necessary to levy a high tax on sugar, blankets, flannels, hats, stockings, shoes, harness, and all other like articles, which only a few people use, in order to avoid the necessity of enacting an income-tax law which would impose an unjust and an unbearable burden on the toiling millions of poor people who are to-day staggering and falling beneath the weight of high prices. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The policy of the Republican party may be right—impose a high tariff on sugar to satisfy the demands of the sugar trust and thereby secure future campaign contributions, but give to a patient, long-suffering, confiding people free catgut, whip gut, and worm gut. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

With broken promises, insincerity, pomposity, and guts on the free list the Republican party's capital stock in trade is immune from taxation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, the country is not satisfied with your tariff law, nor with the party that enacted it. True and loyal citizens in all parts of the United States are aroused as they never were before.

They have diagnosed the case and found that the grand old party is infected with a malignant form of political leprosy known as Cannonism—an intolerable and incurable disease. A heroic remedy has been prescribed and will be heroically administered. That great tribunal of last resort, the sovereign citizens of our country, have solemnly and unalterably decreed that Cannonism, together with all those who have aided, abetted, or assisted Cannonism, must go.

Too late for you gentlemen to rush into print now and from the teeth out attempt to repudiate and discredit your friend and benefactor. Your constituents know you have become inoculated with this poisonous virus, and they are determined, for public good, to remove you to the pesthouse of political obscurity. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The day after the next election some Republican Marc Antony will stand over the political remains of that distinguished exponent of latter-day Republican principles—the Speaker of this House, recently dubbed the "Iron Duke"—and proclaim in sorrow and despair:

But yesterday the word of the Iron Duke might
Have stood against the world; now lies he there,
And none so poor to do him reverence.

[Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PARSONS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 111. Joint resolution to donate a brass cannon to the State of Georgia.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13410) to modify the one hundred and twenty-second and one hundred and twenty-fourth articles of war, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. BULKELEY, and Mr. OVERMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 1. For the survey and resurvey of lands to be allotted in severalty under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians," and under any other act or acts providing for the survey and allotment of lands in severalty to Indians, including the necessary clerical work incident thereto and to the issuance of all patents in the field and in the office of Indian Affairs, and to the delivery of trust patents for allotments under said act or any such act or acts; and for the survey and subdivision of Indian reservations and lands to be allotted to Indians under authority of law, $215,000, to be immediately available and to be repaid proportionately out of any Indian moneys held in trust or otherwise by the United States and available by law for such reimbursable purpose: Provided, That the unexpended balances of all continuing appropriations heretofore made for allotment work, general or specific, are hereby made available for the purposes enumerated herein: Provided further, That hereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be stated annual accounts between the United States and each tribe of Indians arising under appropriations heretofore made, or that may hereafter be made, which by law are required to be reimbursed to the United States, crediting in said accounts the sum so reimbursed, if any; and the Secretary of the Interior shall pay, out of any fund or funds belonging to such tribe or tribes of Indians applicable thereto and held by the United States in trust or otherwise, all balances of accounts due to the United States and not already reimbursed to the Treasury, and deposit such sums in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts; and such accounts shall be received and examined by the proper auditor of the Treasury Department and the balances arising thereon certified to the Secretary of the Treasury: And provided also, That hereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall transmit to Congress annually on the first Monday in December a cost account for the preceding fiscal year of all survey and allotment work on Indian reservations.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve the point of order on the proviso contained in lines 16 to 19, on page 2, for the purpose of ascertaining the purpose——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas would not be in order at this time, a point of order being pending.

Mr. MANN. It might be read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be read for information if there be no objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

After the word "purpose," in line 16, page 2, add the following:

"Provided further, That any mineral lands in any Indian reservation created by act of Congress, treaty, or executive order which contain valuable minerals, petroleum, or other mineral products, or coal or saline lands, or lands containing clays, building or other stone of commercial value, shall be subject to lease for a term not to exceed twenty-five years by the Secretary of the Interior on such terms and under such regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order at this time and is not now offered; it has merely been read for information.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing is in order except by unanimous consent while the point of order is pending.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve my point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that on March 15, 1909, I introduced in the House the bill H. R. 66, which was sent to the Secretary of the Interior by the Indian Committee, to state whether or not that department had any objections to the bill. They reported back that they had not if certain language was stricken out, beginning in line 10:

And any such lands allotted to an Indian under any law or treaty, with restrictions or alienation, may be leased by the allottee, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, on such terms and under such regulations as he may prescribe.

With that stricken out, they stated they thought this bill should pass. I will now read the letter:

FEBRUARY 8, 1910.

Hon. CHARLES H. BURKE,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 27, 1910, referring for report H. R. 66, entitled "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease allotted or unallotted Indian lands for mining purposes."

The act of Congress approved March 3, 1909 (35 Stat. L., 781), provides, in part, that allotted Indian land may be leased for mining purposes under the supervision of the department. I therefore recommend that that part of the bill beginning with the fourth word in line 10, up to and including the third word in line 14, be stricken from the bill, and that the title be changed by striking out the words "allotted or." If the changes are made as suggested, the bill will read as follows:

"A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease unallotted Indian lands for mining purposes.

"Be it enacted, etc., That any mineral lands in any Indian reservation created by act of Congress, treaty, or executive order, which contain valuable minerals, petroleum, or other mineral products, or coal or saline lands, or lands containing clays, building or other stone of commercial value, shall be subject to lease for a term of not to exceed twenty-five years by the Secretary of the Interior on such terms and under such regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes."

I believe that where minerals are located on lands which have been set aside for the use of the Indians these natural resources should be developed for their use and benefit, and accordingly recommend that the bill as changed be enacted into law.

From surface indications, discoveries, and explorations in the surrounding country, it appears that on the Colorado River Indian Reservation there are probably gold and silver; on the San Carlos Reservation, tufa, copper, and gold; on the Truxton Canyon Reservation, gold and copper; on the Fort Apache Reservation, guano, gold, and building stone; on the Western Shoshone Reservation, gold and copper; and on the Mescalero Reservation, gold, silver, and copper. On account of the lack of authority to permit mining, no prospecting has been permitted on executive order Indian reservations, and the discoveries of the minerals have been due, as referred to above, to surface indications and prospecting on adjacent lands.

Very respectfully, R. A. BALLINGER, Secretary.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Assuming that all that the gentleman claims is correct, what place has this proposition in this paragraph in the bill? Why should it go into this bill at all when the Committee on Indian Affairs may report a bill covering the substance of the gentleman's proposition at any time and that bill receive consideration in the House, where Members have an opportunity to see and read it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will begin at line 10 to 15 of the Indian appropriation bill he will find this language:

And for the survey and subdivision of Indian reservations and lands to be allotted to Indians under authority of law, $215,000, to be immediately available and to be repaid proportionately out of any Indian moneys held in trust or otherwise by the United States and available by law for such reimbursable purposes.

Now, this is for survey and subdivision of any Indian reservation, and if mineral lands are found on any of these reservations, let these surveys and subdivisions be made on the recommendation——

Mr. MANN. But that is purely for a survey of Indian lands. It has no relation to controlling lands for surveying. I do not think the amendment of the gentleman is germane to the proposition. As a matter of parliamentary law it is certainly not germane in any other way. It is for an entirely different purpose.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If a man should go on to this reservation and lease land, would he not have to have it surveyed? Would he lease land for mining purposes without its being surveyed and the boundaries established? He certainly would be foolish if he did.

Mr. MANN. I do not see any connection between the survey of land and determining what should be done with the land after it is surveyed. The survey of the public land has no connection with the question of the homestead right or the disposition of the land after it is surveyed. The two propositions are as wide apart as can be. There is no relationship between the two so far as legislation is concerned. The gentleman's proposition is to interject into a bill a proviso that the Government appropriate certain money to make the survey. What disposition shall be made of the land itself?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. When surveyed?

Mr. MANN. When surveyed. It does not make any difference.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] has expired.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, what is the parliamentary situation? Did the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] offer an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending. It was merely read for information. It could not be offered while the point of order was pending or reserved.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] reserves the point of order on the proviso found in line 20, on page 2.

Mr. STAFFORD. Line 16 to line 18, on page 2, making available for survey work all unexpended balances of appropriations. I wish to inquire what is the special need of calling upon the unexpended balances for work in the next fiscal year?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman's inquiry, that this is a proviso that is in the existing law and has been in the law for some years. It is necessary, because this is work that can not be contracted for. Much of it is done by employing day labor, and if there is not some such provision as this it might interfere with the doing of the work during the fiscal year. In other words, you can not make contracts for this kind of work, and therefore it is impossible to determine just how much money can be used or may be required during a single year.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not understand from the gentleman's statement wherein there is any special difficulty in making a lump-sum appropriation for the necessary work that will be required for survey of the Indian lands during the fiscal year, and why we should make an exception in this instance to the practice of Congress in all similar appropriations.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have stated that this is the practice under existing law at the present time, and has been for some years.

Mr. STAFFORD. While it may be the practice in this one particular instance, I can say it is not the practice so far as Congress appropriates money for other branches of the government service, and I would like to ascertain some special reason for its existence, even though it has been carried in the Indian appropriation act in prior years.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think I have already stated that contracts are not let for this work. The men are employed by the day. The crews go out to do the work, and it would be impossible to estimate so that you could make your appropriation if it was to be limited as appropriations usually are. There might be a deficiency in spite of anything you could do unless you suspended the work at some time before the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Wherein is there any difficulty in making a lump-sum appropriation for all the work that will be required during the fiscal year 1911? You provide here a total amount of $215,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes, sir; that is just what we have done.

Mr. STAFFORD. And in addition to that, you make available the unexpended balances. Take, for instance, the postal service, which is far more important for pressing business needs in many of the branches connected with that service than the Indian Service; in fact, in most, if not all, of the postal items we never make available the unexpended balances, but we provide a lump-sum appropriation for the work that will be needed in the fiscal year for which appropriations are then being carried.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Is it not true that in the postal service there may be deficiencies, while there can not be in the Indian Service.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are no more authorized in the postal service to create deficiencies than in other branches. It is the practice under the present administration not to create a deficiency except where urgently demanded by the needs of the Postal Service.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. But in the Indian Service deficiencies are absolutely prohibited.

Mr. STAFFORD. By what law?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will give the gentleman the citation later.

Mr. STAFFORD. That same general law is applicable to the postal service and to all the departments of the Government.

Mr. MANN. Although the departments are subject to the same law, if the law provides they shall do something they can create a deficiency in doing that, just as is done in the Post-Office Department, where they have to pay clerks so much money.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am laboring under the impression that there is a special law applying to Indian appropriations by which the department is prohibited from creating any deficiency.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about that. Everything in the Indian appropriation bill depends upon the appropriation, and hence they can not create a deficiency except where something is required to be done by law. May I ask the gentleman this question? I understand the gentleman from South Dakota to say that these surveys were not made by contract; do I so understand the gentleman?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They are not, as a rule.

Mr. MANN. Surveys of the public domain, as a rule, are made under contract.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Surveys of the public lands are made under contract, as a rule, and the appropriations are provided by some committee other than the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MANN. I understand that. I can see the reason for having the appropriations for it, if there is a contract outstanding. The survey of the public lands is usually made under contract with surveyors. Is the gentleman sure that the Indian surveys do not follow the same practice?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes, sir; I am quite sure about it.

Mr. MANN. Well, I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think the employees are all employed on the per diem basis. That is my understanding.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to say what unexpended balances on past years there are?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I can give the gentleman the information in a moment. At the end of the fiscal year, June 30 last, there was an unexpended balance of $37,444.34.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would all that money have reverted to the Treasury but for the provision carried in the last appropriation act?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think it would.

Mr. STAFFORD. What objection would there have been to the policy of increasing the stated appropriation here, and allowing the unexpended balance to revert to the general fund in the Treasury, just as is the practice in all the various services of like character?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The result in the end would be the same, and the appropriations would be that much larger.

Mr. STAFFORD. The result might be the same, but Congress would, in doing so, have some control and know the amount of appropriations for this special character of service. The appropriation bills are limited for the work of the fiscal year for which provision is made. If all appropriation bills would carry an item making available unexpended balances, the House and the committees having jurisdiction of the matters would not be able to determine the amount of money which would be appropriated for the special character of work for the ensuing fiscal year. Under the circumstances, Mr. Chairman, as it seems there is no special reason why these unexpended balances should be made available for these surveys, I feel that I will be compelled to make the point of order on that provision.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What is the point of order, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. STAFFORD. The point of order, Mr. Chairman, is that it is new legislation, and, further, that provision is being made in this bill for appropriations that have heretofore been made in prior appropriations that may be called upon for work that is authorized and not paid for, which should not be available for different work as provided for in the proviso.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, there is a provision in the last Indian appropriation act providing for this, and therefore it would not be subject to the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is reserved on the paragraph. Before that matter is disposed of, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. In the next provision, beginning on line 19, it is provided:

That hereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be stated annual accounts between the United States and each tribe of Indians arising under appropriations heretofore made or that may hereafter be made.

Why does the gentleman couple that with appropriations made in this bill, or was that by inadvertence?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. You mean, not applied to past bills?

Mr. STAFFORD. The present bill.

Mr. MANN. The provision applying to appropriations heretofore made or hereafter to be made does not apply to appropriations made in this act.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Well——

Mr. MANN. This appropriation is made when the act is signed.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then it would be hereafter made.

Mr. MANN. It will not be hereafter made, because this language relates to the time when the bill is signed, not to the time when it is considered in the House. Before the word "made," in line 23, the words "or herein" should be inserted, so that it will read "Under appropriations heretofore or herein made, or that may hereafter be made," if that is the purpose of it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is the purpose of it, and I am willing to accept an amendment, if the gentleman will propose it.

Mr. MANN. I did not know but there might be some reason.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The intention was to make it applicable to the pending bill, and to the appropriations that will be made under it.

Mr. MANN. The amount carried in this item is $215,000, besides the amount now available, which would revert to the Treasury. The amount carried last year under the form of this item was $75,000. I understand there is a statement that there are some different items bunched here. What are they?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will state that under the existing law and the bills heretofore enacted making appropriations for the Indian Service there were six items, all pertaining to the subject of allotments and surveys, divided up by States.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman give us the items?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. MANN. I will take the floor, if I may be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The first item was for allotments under the act of February 8, 1887, known as the Dawes Act, $90,000; the second was surveys and subdivisions of Indian reservations generally, $75,000; survey and allotment work in the Fort Peck Reservation, Mont., $25,000; survey and allotment Sioux Reservation, North and South Dakota, $30,000; allotments, Sioux Reservation, North and South Dakota, $30,000; surveying allotments, Colville Reservation, Washington, $25,000. The appropriation last year was $325,000, and the estimates this year were, as I have indicated, reduced to $275,000; and in the bill we have reduced the amount to $215,000.

Mr. MANN. We made appropriations last year for surveys in specific reservations, retaining some control over the question of how the money should be expended. Are these surveys to be continued out of this appropriation?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They are.

Mr. MANN. What is the object in taking away from Congress the power to control, to some extent, where the money shall be appropriated, and putting it in a lump sum?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It was done in the interest of economy.

Mr. MANN. That is what every department says when it proposes a change, to get a lump-sum appropriation; but I have been here long enough to know that lump-sum appropriations are never in the interest of economy.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The suggestion did not come from the department. It originated with the committee.

Mr. MANN. Then, I do not say that. I would not make that remark about the committee; but it is true, nevertheless. [Laughter.] The gentleman knows that lump-sum appropriations do not produce economy. Upon that theory we might as well abandon the items in the Indian appropriation bill and appropriate $9,000,000 or $10,000,000 to the department.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think, Mr. Chairman, lump-sum appropriations under good administration can be defended, and I can see no reason for dividing up appropriations into three or four parts when it all relates to the same subject. For instance, the first amount was to be expended, according to the appropriation act, under the President; the next item of $75,000 was to be expended under the Secretary of the Interior, and he is the administrative officer of the Department of the Interior and has charge, as a matter of fact, of the work of that department, and therefore it was thought advisable to put the two appropriations, one under the President and the other under the Secretary of the Interior, referring to the same subject, into one item.

Mr. MANN. Well, here comes a proposition for a special item for a survey of a reservation that is to be opened up. Congress is informed in regard to that; it makes an appropriation for that purpose; but under the form of the present bill Congress has no control over the subject and receives no information in regard to it. Last year we could tell something about what the money was to be expended for. What is this to be expended for?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. For exactly what I have said.

Mr. MANN. But those are the estimates of last year.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. These are for the estimates of this year.

Mr. MANN. I asked for the estimates last year, and I understood the gentleman gave them to me.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The estimates this year were made from the bill of last year. I have the present law here, if the gentleman would like to have me refer to it.

Mr. MANN. I have the law in my hand, if the gentleman refers to the current appropriation law.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes. The gentleman from Illinois also has the estimate, and he will see——

Mr. MANN. No; I have not the estimates. They are on my desk; somebody kindly presented them to me; but as it is a large volume I have not taken the trouble to peruse it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will notice the next proviso, he will find that we have made provision for a statement that will tell us hereafter something that perhaps we do not at present know—exactly how every dollar of the money is expended.

Mr. MANN. I might say to the gentleman from South Dakota that I have examined his bill with as much care as I could, and it is the most difficult bill to examine I have seen in a great many years in the House. I will say, that while he has changed the form of the bill, so that no one without an exhaustive study can compare it with any appropriation bill that has ever passed the House, in direct violation of the law upon the subject, still the gentleman has put in his bill a number of provisions which seem to me of great value to the Government in comparing its future relations with the Indians and the expenditure of money for the Indians. Some of these provisions are in this paragraph. I have no doubt they will prove of great value if they become a law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in relation to the point of order submitted by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] I may say that I shall withdraw the point of order on the paragraph, as far as I am concerned. The point of order submitted by the gentleman from Wisconsin was on the provision commencing in line 16, page 2, providing that—> the unexpended balances of all continuing appropriations heretofore made for allotment work, general or specific, are hereby made available for the purposes enumerated herein.

I take it, Mr. Chairman, that that is merely a reappropriation of money that has heretofore been appropriated.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, has not the discussion just had disclosed that the appropriations were for some specific projects, but under the phraseology of this proviso you are granting appropriations designed for specific projects to be available generally?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may be correct about that. It might require the change of a word and make "herein" read "therein." I am not sure, however, but that the language ought to continue and say that such sums are hereby reappropriated to escape the force of the statute passed last year requiring all the moneys unexpended to be covered back into the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin state to what portion of the paragraph his point of order relates?

Mr. STAFFORD. Page 2, lines 16 to 19, inclusive, to the proviso.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, before it is too late I want to reserve a point of order on the words "to be immediately available" in line 13, page 2. I want to make some inquiries about it of the gentleman in charge of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why are the appropriations made immediately available? That means a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. For the same reason that we reappropriate the unexpended balance. It simply permits the use of this fund at all times to be drawn upon for this class of work. I may say to the gentleman from New York that all the moneys that are appropriated in this section are reimbursable, and practically will be reimbursed, from the sale of surplus lands in the reservation when the surplus lands are sold.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the money required for work to be done in the present fiscal year or during the next fiscal year?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am unable to state as to whether it is absolutely required for this particular year, but it might be next year. There never has been a time in the history of the allotment work when there is as much allotment work going on as at the present time.

The desire of the department is to complete the allotment work at the earliest practicable time. The committee was unable to see any reason why this should not be done, and felt that it would be in the interest of enabling the work to be done sooner than it might be otherwise.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This bill carries appropriations for the next fiscal year.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The use of the words "to be immediately available" makes the appropriation available for the present fiscal year.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a deficiency.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the appropriations heretofore made should be exhausted before the end of this fiscal year, then this appropriation would be available; but the theory upon which we made the appropriation is that the allotment work is now being conducted in a manner which we do not want to interfere with in order that it may be completed at the earliest possible time. When it is completed, no further appropriations will be required.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has any request been made that that money be made available during this fiscal year for additional moneys for the present fiscal year?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman's committee has no jurisdiction of deficiencies?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order made by the gentleman from Wisconsin. That point is made against the proviso:

> That the unexpended balances of all continuing appropriations heretofore made for allotment work, general or specific, are hereby made available for the purposes enumerated herein.

Now, there is no allegation that the purposes enumerated herein are not authorized by law, and they seem in fact to relate to allotments. The Chair thinks that it is competent to appropriate unexpended balances. The Chair understood the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] to suggest that the moneys might heretofore have been appropriated for some other purpose than that enumerated herein, but, even so, the Chair finds several precedents, one of them in section 3591 of volume 4 of Hinds's Precedents, which states in the caption:

> The reappropriation of an unexpended balance for an object authorized by law may be made on appropriation bill.

In that case the Postmaster-General was authorized to apply to the payment of the salaries of letter carriers the sum of the unexpended balance of an appropriation which had been made for letter boxes. From that and other precedents it seems perfectly clear to the Chair that it is proper in this bill to provide that the unexpended balance for continuing the appropriation heretofore made for allotment work may be made available for the purposes mentioned in this bill, particularly as the said purposes appear from a very hasty reading to relate exclusively to allotments. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order to the words "to be immediately available," in line 13, page 2 of the bill. It is a deficiency appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota desire to be heard upon that point of order?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not desire to be heard, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman insists on his point of order. Does the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall if the gentleman desires.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I simply want to state that the committee, in the interests of good administration and in the interests of dispatching allotment work, believes that this appropriation ought to be in this bill. In some parts of the country the season when allotment work can be carried on is limited to only a few months in a year, and it is practically impossible to estimate just how much money may be needed in a given time. I sincerely hope that the gentleman from New York will not insist upon his point of order. If he does, I have nothing to offer in response to the point. I presume it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This appropriation is for the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1910.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This bill is not to affect work to be done during the present fiscal year. Now, if no estimate has been made for additional money for the present fiscal year, the use of these words makes the entire appropriation available.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It will do no harm.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If there be a deficiency in this appropriation, the department should submit an estimate for that deficiency, and it should go to the committee which has jurisdiction of appropriations for deficiencies.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It does not appear, Mr. Chairman, that there is any deficiency, but there may be.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, then, let the department submit an estimate, and let it be carried in the general deficiency bill, as all other deficiencies are carried.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist upon his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask what became of my amendment which was sent to the Clerk's desk pending the disposal of the point of order? I desire to offer it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas now offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk began the reading of the amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The amendment has already been read.

The CHAIRMAN. But it has only been read for information.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desired to have it read so as to go in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be reported at this point.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "purpose," in line 16, page 2, add the following:
"Provided further, That any mineral lands in any Indian reservation created by act of Congress, treaty, or executive order which contain valuable minerals, petroleum, or other mineral products, or coal or saline lands, or lands containing clays, building or other stone of commercial value, shall be subject to lease for a term not to exceed twenty-five years by the Secretary of the Interior on such terms and under such regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. On that amendment I desire, Mr. Chairman, to make the point of order; but I will reserve it, if the gentleman desires.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to state that, as stated in the letter read to the House a few moments ago in my time, there are several reservations where it is well known that various minerals are found, and probably in paying quantities. The Indians living on these reservations would be greatly benefited if these mines were opened; it would furnish them with employment which they do not now get. The only employment the Indian now gets is from the whites living in his neighborhood on ranches, and so forth.

If these mines were opened in the reservation, they would get employment on top of the ground in furnishing the timber and in teaming and doing various lines of work. They can do, and should, work if we give them the opportunity offered by my amendment. Many of them do very good work when it is given them near the reservation; and it would greatly benefit them. Not only that, but this amendment would tend to develop the country in which the Indians live; but without it these minerals will lie idle and be of no benefit to anyone, and I see no reason why we should not follow the recommendation of the letter of the Secretary of the Interior and permit him to lease the mineral lands on Indian reservations for the benefit of the Indians and thereby develop the country and benefit the Indians. It is certainly an entering wedge toward the policy that has been outlined toward the further development of the undeveloped mineral resources of the public domain in the West, and I hope that this amendment will not be objected to and will go into this bill. In answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who said a few moments ago that this matter ought to be investigated carefully, I desire to say that it has been investigated for years before the Committee on Indian Affairs and has been reported favorably by it in the Sixtieth Congress and passed this House. There is no objection to it from any quarter, so far as I know, and I see no reason why this amendment should not go upon this bill.

Mr. GOULDEN. What is the practice now in regard to mineral lands lying within an Indian reservation—the law regulating them?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They can not be used at all in any way.

Mr. GOULDEN. They are of no use whatever to the Indians or to the public at large?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; they are of no benefit to mankind in any way, and they can not be used in any way.

Mr. MANN. They can not be wasted, then.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They can not be used unless we permit them to be leased and developed.

Mr. GOULDEN. There is no way to utilize the present mineral resources in Indian reservations?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; they can not now be utilized.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the purpose of the gentleman's amendment, but I do not think it is proper to put it on the bill here. I might say the bill which has been read at the Clerk's desk as an amendment has been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and has had a very careful investigation, and as for myself, I am favorable to the bill, and I think it will be favorably reported to the committee, and I hope it will be favorably reported to the House, where it will have the consideration which its gravity deserves.

I hope it will be reported favorably to the House where it will have that consideration which its gravity deserves. Undoubtedly there ought to be something done with these Indian mineral lands, and there ought to be some general conservation policy pursued in reference to them that I believe ought to be pursued in reference to the public lands and public mineral lands generally. Under some system of leasing or getting a royalty for the benefit of the Indians I believe these lands could be developed. Under the jurisdiction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior or some other competent officer, a far better arrangement could be made than to sell these lands outright to the purchasers, who would exploit them and develop them for their own. But it is clearly opposed to the tenor of this bill and subject to a point of order, I think, and I believe it will come up hereafter for a full and generous consideration.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question simply for information?

Mr. HINSHAW. I will.

Mr. COX of Indiana. In the allotment of lands to Indians what plan or policy of the Government, if it has had any policy, when it sets out any lands to the Indians, as to giving the Indians any mineral land?

Mr. HINSHAW. When the allotment is made the allottee takes the land with all the appurtenances thereto, including the mineral.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then, there has been no particular attempt made on the part of the Government to keep the Indian away from mineral land?

Mr. HINSHAW. I think not; but lands which contain mineral and have not been allotted are not at present being used in any way whatever. As the letter of the Secretary of the Interior indicates, they do not know the contents of these lands except from superficial observation.

Mr. GOULDEN. Does the gentleman think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas will not accomplish the purpose he seeks and, we think, ought to be accomplished for the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. HINSHAW. I think it is in the right direction. I am not sure whether, in all of its features, it is correct, but in general it is all right.

Mr. GOULDEN. The gentleman believes that something ought to be done?

Mr. HINSHAW. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota insist on his point of order?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not true that all the minerals on some Indian reservations are not now leased?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My understanding is that that is true.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not true that generally the Secretary of the Interior has authority to lease minerals on Indian lands, that is, on the unallotted lands?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not think that is the case.

Mr. MONDELL. I know it does apply to some reservations.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think not, generally.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what authority of law now exists for the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to lease these Indian lands?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. None, I think; except as it applies to specific reservations or areas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Where it is mentioned in the law?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Where it is mentioned in the particular law. I will have to insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the well-known rule, no provision changing existing law is in order on an appropriation bill or any amendment thereto. This amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] clearly proposes to change existing law by making new law. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the relief of distress among Indians, not otherwise provided for, including the purchase of vaccine and the expense of vaccination, and for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases among Indians, $40,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee a question or two. Does the Government employ physicians to treat the Indians at these agencies?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They do.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Do they pay them a salary, or for what work they do?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They do.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Pay them a salary?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They pay them a salary. Usually upon every reservation there is an agency physician, who gets an annual salary.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I observe in this bill that you provide for the purchase of vaccine, and then for the expense of vaccination. I would like to ask why you put in there the expense of vaccination of these Indians when you provide a physician for that purpose?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will state to the gentleman that many of these reservations are very extensive in point of area. It may be 100 or 150 miles from some portions of the reservation to the agency where the physician is stationed, and vaccination therefore is done at a point where it is accessible to where the Indians reside; and in those cases of course it has to be paid for.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Well, vaccination is not an operation that is done very often. Usually once in a lifetime, and in cases of danger of contagion more frequently. So, if these physicians are employed on a salary to treat these Indians I am unable to see any reason for their paying them for this extra work.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. There is another reason in addition to the one stated by the chairman. There are a number of smaller Indian reservations, where there is no physician. As a rule, there are physicians. But there are a number of cases where the reservations are small, and there is no government physician.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Well, I would suggest that this provision does not seem to me to have any reference to that sort of matter.

Mr. MANN. May I call the attention of my colleague to some information, notwithstanding the statement of the distinguished gentleman, that there is a physician on each of these reservations. Apparently the charge is that there is not a real physician.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. It would seem to me so, from this provision of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Because in the document they have sent to the House they say in reference to this appropriation:

This appropriation would permit the organization of a competent medical corps, in charge of a chief, with headquarters at Salt Lake City, Utah, assisted by at least five district medical officers, to be distributed throughout the Indian country. These district physicians to have the direction of the school and agency doctors—

The gentleman will notice the distinction——

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN (continuing):

And to see that all health and sanitary regulations are strictly enforced throughout their districts.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How much salary do they recommend?

Mr. MANN. Oh, they recommend $50,000 for that particular project.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Does my colleague know whether these physicians are appointed on competitive examination or through the influence of politics?

Mr. MANN. You mean the agents?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I mean the physicians.

Mr. MANN. They never have been authorized yet.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Those that are already there?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will pardon me, they are civil-service physicians, as a rule, and in some cases they are employed under contract.

Mr. MANN. I think they are employed under contract.

Mr. GOULDEN. And now they are asking that 60 be appointed?

Mr. MANN. They will not be appointed until Congress takes some action.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, he has overlooked a very material part of this appropriation, which reads thus:

For the relief of distress among Indians, not otherwise provided for, including the purchase of vaccine and the expense of vaccination, and for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases among Indians, $40,000.

Mr. MANN. Neither my colleague nor myself had overlooked that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This includes everything of that kind and character. This is the provision caring for them annually. I think it is a very necessary expenditure of money, as much so as any in this entire bill.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that it is necessary to have an appropriation for the purpose of stamping out and relieving tuberculosis, trachoma, and smallpox and other contagious and infectious diseases. I think that is important and proper. In the last annual appropriation bill there was an item of $10,000 to be immediately available for the purpose of treating Indians that were afflicted with trachoma, and it occurs to me——

Mr. MANN. That was not in the annual appropriation bill; in the deficiency bill, probably.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. An emergency proposition.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That was an emergency appropriation, and the amount was $12,000 instead of $10,000.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I remember, however, that the appropriation was made. It occurs to me from the reading of this provision in the bill, and these extra appropriations that are to be made for the treatment of trachoma, with the hearings that have been read by my colleague from Illinois, that this committee—I do not know whether they have considered it or not—ought to consider the advisability of reorganizing the medical service as relates to the Indians.

It seems to me that there is something radically wrong. If they are able to control these Indians and prevent some of these diseases that are preventable, it ought to be done, and I would suggest to this committee that a very valuable work might be taken up here, and something done to render the medical service more efficient, so far as the care of these Indians is concerned.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would say in reply to the gentleman that it was suggested to do just what he is proposing, and that it was the unanimous opinion of the committee, after giving it much consideration, that to authorize such an organization in a bureau or a department would be creating something that we perhaps would have to continue indefinitely. We were of the opinion that it would not be wise to provide specifically for a medical corps such as the gentleman has indicated, but make this appropriation, which is a reasonably liberal one, and let it be expended under such a corps of physicians as the Indian Bureau may wish to employ. In that way we avoid doing by legislation on an appropriation bill what the gentleman proposes.

Mr. MORSE. I sincerely hope that the gentleman from Illinois will not insist on his point of order to this paragraph. There are small reservations where it is absolutely necessary that some one furnish this vaccine and provide for the medical expense of caring for these Indians. There is in my district, at Flambeau, a band known as the Flambeau band of Chippewa Indians. Tuberculosis is prevalent, and very frequently smallpox, on that reservation. There is no money in the Treasury belonging to those Indians. Many of them are absolutely penniless, and it is pretty nearly necessary for the Government to furnish vaccine and medicines of various kinds and medical treatment for these Indians, or they will get none, because they can not hire physicians.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MORSE. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. Is there any reason why the State of Wisconsin, where they live, can not take care of this proposition?

Mr. MORSE. Possibly there is none; but it has been customary for the General Government to do that.

Mr. MANN. It takes care of its other poor, does it not?

Mr. MORSE. Not all of them. As my colleague from Milwaukee suggests, the old soldiers are taken care of by the General Government.

Mr. MANN. They are not the poor of Wisconsin.

Mr. MORSE. These are the wards of the General Government.

Mr. MANN. No longer the wards of the General Government.

Mr. MORSE. Yes; they are, in many cases. They are the wards of the General Government until the limitation is removed on the sale of their lands, as I understand the situation.

Mr. MANN. I know; but where the limitation is not removed on the sale of the lands they have property.

Mr. FERRIS. It is not taxable, though.

Mr. MORSE. That property brings in absolutely nothing.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can an Indian contract debts on that land?

Mr. MORSE. No.

Mr. MANN. They have their land free from taxation, with the right to cultivate it, which is more than any white man has.

Mr. COX of Indiana. But can an Indian contract debts on his land?

Mr. MORSE. No; the Indian can not raise a dollar on this land.

Mr. MANN. You mean by borrowing?

Mr. MORSE. He can not borrow any money on his land.

Mr. MANN. He can obtain money from the land.

Mr. MORSE. He can not borow money on the land, for the reason that the Government will not allow him to sell or mortgage it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said he could not raise any money on the land. He can raise money if he will cultivate it. He can not borrow money on it, but if he will go to work he can raise money.

Mr. MORSE. This land is in many instances almost worthless—cut-over land. Many of these Indians are women and children, unable to dig out pine stumps and prepare the land for cultivation. I sincerely hope, from motives of pure humanity, the gentleman from Illinois will not insist upon the point of order to this paragraph.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I should like to have the point of order stated.

Mr. MANN. I can state the point of order. There is no authority in the law, as I understand it, and if there is, I would be very glad, under the rules, to have the gentleman from South Dakota point it out, for the Government to provide money for the relief of distress among the Indians, as a general proposition, or even for the purchase of vaccine, or for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis or other contagious and infectious disease among the Indians. There is no authority of law for these propositions.

There has been for years an appropriation for the purchase of vaccine and the expense of vaccination, but that confers no authority for it in this appropriation bill. There was last year an emergency appropriation for the treatment of trachoma, but that confers no authority for it in this appropriation bill, and there never has been an appropriation for the other things. There are contained in this item three propositions for which three separate estimates were made; two of the propositions are new and never have appeared in an Indian appropriation bill before, I think.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Is not there a provision of law whereby the Government can appropriate for stamping out any contagious disease among the Indians?

Mr. MANN. I think not.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I thought there was.

Mr. MANN. No; there is no authority at law for it. There has been an appropriation to stamp out smallpox among the Indians. There seemed to be a good reason why it should be done. As stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin, the various States were unwilling to spend the small amount of money necessary for the purpose, assuming that it was the duty of the General Government, having had the Indians on its hands for many years, and having disposed of their property, to continue to maintain them in happiness and health; and smallpox being a dread disease which might escape from the Indians to the whites, there might have been reason for doing that.

Now we come to the further provision that we shall inaugurate a scheme of providing for the relief of distress among the Indians. As I understand it, that is a new item in an appropriation bill, although the gentleman from South Dakota can correct me if I am in error, and further to organize a medical corps in the Indian Service. We had an annual message from the President of the United States recently, in which he recommended that all the divisions of the Government having a medical bureau should be coordinated in one branch, except the army and navy. And yet in the face of that proposition, now pending before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which is giving consideration to the question of endeavoring to consolidate these bureaus of the Government that deal with sanitary affairs—in the face of that recommendation of the President here is a distinct proposition to create a new medical department of the Government, because that is what this amounts to.

Why, $40,000 appropriated in this bill is a mere bagatelle compared with what will be necessary if the Government organizes a medical corps, suggested by the estimate, and endeavors to carry out the theory that it is the duty of the General Government to provide for the health and against the disease of the Indians. We are reaching a point where Congress must determine whether in the future it will endeavor to pay the expenses of the Indians out of the Indian fund; whether it will permit the Indian funds to be squandered, and then pay for the support and health and maintenance of the Indians and for the relief and distress of Indians out of the general funds of the United States.

The distinguished gentleman from South Dakota in his most able speech in introducing this bill called attention to the figures, and, as I recollect them, the figures show that on an average the Indian is far better off than is the average citizen in the States of Illinois or Ohio or Indiana or Oklahoma or almost any other State of the Union—on an average far more prosperous in his possessions. They have large sums of money to their credit in the Treasury; they have immense tracts of land of great value in their possession and in their ownership.

Now, shall we undertake to put on the white citizen of the country, with less property than the Indian, the cost of maintaining the Indian in health and under happy and prosperous conditions simply because the Indian is not inclined to be so industrious as the white citizen? The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MORSE] says that some of the Indians in his State do not have the money to protect themselves against smallpox. If there are poor people residing in the State the State ought to do it, and if they have the property they ought to go to work on it and earn some of the fruits of their toil on that property. They will not do it, and neither would the gentleman nor myself, if the Government would pay our expenses.

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MORSE. We are not asking for clothing or bread or food; we are simply asking for medical attendance in cases of absolute need.

Mr. MANN. Very well. The city of Chicago furnishes every year free medical attendance and supplies ten times over the amount carried by this appropriation bill, and every other large city in the country does practically the same thing. Why should not the State of Wisconsin devote a little of her great wealth toward giving medical attendance to those who may need it in her State, whether they be white or Indians?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that we are annually spending hundreds of thousands of dollars for stamping out diseases in cattle and hogs and sheep, and has not the gentleman frequently voted for those bills, and is not a human being, an Indian, more helpless than those dumb animals, and why should not we endeavor to preserve their lives?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have the greatest respect and admiration for my friend from Texas, but I never have known him to ask me a pertinent question yet.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And I notice that the gentleman has not answered the question.

Mr. MANN. The question that the gentleman submits does not require an answer. It has nothing to do with this case at all.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not the gentleman and myself sending out to our constituents each day books on the diseases of cattle, horses, and hogs; and are not we expending hundreds of thousands of dollars for stamping out these diseases; and why should not the owners of those cattle and hogs or dogs, or whatever they are, send these books out?

Mr. MANN. It is true that the people in my district are helping to educate the people in the gentleman's district concerning the diseases of hogs; but I do not know why, if that is so, we should be required to pay the expenses for all other information in the gentleman's district. The people in my district do not happen to possess any hogs.

Mr. COX of Indiana. But the people in the gentleman's district get the hogs which the people in Texas raise.

Mr. MANN. And we pay mighty high prices for them, too, although I do not see the pertinency of a question of that kind being injected into a discussion of this kind. It at once leads off to some other matter which is not pertinent at all.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Does not anyone send flower and garden seeds to the gentleman's constituents?

Mr. MANN. And the other gentleman from Texas——

A MEMBER. Oklahoma.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; from Texas—so close to Texas that there is no distinction—asks another pertinent question like that. I do not wonder that both these gentlemen wish to escape from the proposition before the House and endeavor to lead off to something else.

The gentlemen have become so accustomed to getting everything out of the Public Treasury and thinking that the Treasury of the United States should pay all of the expenses of the gentlemen's constituents and their campaign expenses that it is utterly impossible, apparently, for them to comprehend that there is a line beyond which we ought not to go in taking money out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I did not know that we had the gentleman so bewildered that he could not distinguish between States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman from Illinois understand that the object of this appropriation is to organize a medical corps with a chief and a number of assistants?

Mr. MANN. I read that to the House, I will say to the gentleman from New York—to organize a new medical corps in violation of the suggestions of the President recently submitted to Congress.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the bill does not provide for that. The estimates call for that, but the bill does not follow the estimates.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the money to be used for, if not for the purpose that the commissioner says he wants to use it for?

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman think it will be used for, when the department says if they get the money "that this appropriation would permit the organization of a competent medical corps, in charge of a chief," and so forth?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; and it would permit an excursion down the Potomac River also.

Mr. MANN. Yes; I presume so.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But is it to be presumed that such an excursion will be made out of this money?

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that when the department says it wants money for a certain purpose and the money is granted to it that we have a right to presume that perhaps it may be used by the department for that purpose? I know it often is not, but have we not a right to presume that the department will use it for the purpose it says it wants it for?

Mr. CAMPBELL. In the preparation of this bill we did not authorize the creation of the bureau suggested in the estimate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman only asked for two minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I will take all the time I want to discuss the point of order; the gentleman need not worry. What they asked for was an appropriation to enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to take necessary measures for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases among the Indians, and the committee followed the language of the department; but the department said if it gets the money it will use it for the purpose of creating a competent medical corps. I presume that the department will keep its word if it gets the money.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I desire to ask the gentleman whether or not the bill appropriates the same amount of money the department asked for?

Mr. MANN. It appropriates a smaller amount.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. How much did they ask for?

Mr. MANN. They asked for $50,000, and then they asked for two other items of $5,000 each, which would make $60,000, and the appropriation is $40,000, and the purpose for which it would be used, as stated by the department, is to organize a medical corps.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to answer the gentleman from Illinois. The trouble with the gentleman's position is that he is laboring under a misapprehension of the facts. There has been an appropriation "for the relief of distress among Indians" since 1899, at which time there was appropriated the amount of $20,000 for that express purpose, and it has been available ever since and expenditures have been made annually therefrom. In the appropriation act for the current year there is an item of $5,000 "for the purchase of pure vaccine matter and the vaccination of Indians." Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit that there can be nothing in the point of order made by the gentleman because it is proposed to appropriate money to be expended in the different States in the care of some of its citizens; the greater part of this appropriation is to be expended in the Territories in the protection of Indians who are wards of the Government. It is true, as I stated yesterday, that many of the Indians of this country are very prosperous and very well to do, but there is no way by which we can justly take the money from those who have it to take care of those who have it not.

In the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico trachoma broke out a year or so ago. It was so severe that an appeal was made to Congress, resulting in a prompt response by an appropriation of $12,000, which has been expended in the treatment of that disease. It is believed unless the progress of the disease is checked it will become general, and it is only a question of time when it will affect the white population of the country as well as the Indians. It does in some localities affect them already.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What does the gentleman say in response to the argument of the gentleman from Illinois, as to whether or not you believe that any part of this money will be used for the purpose of organizing a medical corps?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Why, Mr. Chairman, the committee were of the same mind as is the gentleman from Illinois. We did not wish to do anything that would indicate that we approved the proposition to organize a corps in the Indian Bureau to become a permanent feature in the administration of Indian affairs; but I do not believe that this money can be expended and good results obtained unless somebody who is competent is employed to expend it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Now, then, does the gentleman say that this appropriation carried by this bill will be used or attempted to be used to carry out the recommendations of the department in asking for $50,000 or $60,000, or any part of it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I can only say in answer to the inquiry, Mr. Chairman, that the committee gave the bureau to understand that it would not tolerate any such organization. The appropriation is $20,000 less than was estimated for by the department.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield for a question on the point of order, in which I am interested?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Does the gentleman insist that this appropriation is justified by the fact that other appropriations like it have been made and that is the only authority of law which it has?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is the only authority of law; but I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that if this committee can not originate appropriations for the care and support of Indians then I do not know what the committee may do.

Every gratuity appropriation that is made here is, perhaps, without any specific authority of law, and yet we have made such appropriations annually for very many years without, so far as I am informed, questioning the technical authority for them, and certainly without invoking a decision of the Chair on the subject. If this is not a meritorious subject for the consideration of Congress, it will be difficult to find one in any appropriation bill that has come before this House. I am entirely willing to accept my share of responsibility for reporting this item and incorporating it in this bill. If it goes out on a point of order raised, the responsibility for such action will not rest upon the committee which reported it with absolute unanimity.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, each year when the Indian appropriation bill is under discussion we hear the theorists and near theorists advise how to manage the Indian. Each year we hear from the practical side, and also from the theoretical side. The RECORD is teeming with advice on how to manage the affairs of the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes, when, in truth and in fact, what they most need and what they most desire is to be let alone. I again repeat, what they most desire and what is really most beneficial to them is to let them have their land and their money and run their own affairs, not in a theoretical way, but in a plain, common-sense everyday way.

It has been my pleasure all my life to know a great deal of the Indian people of the Five Civilized Tribes. I was born within 16 miles of the Oklahoma line, and from the first Fourth of July celebration to the last I ever attended I saw and mingled with many of them and knew much of their traits. It is no secret, and it is very true, that we have Indians who would, if turned loose with land and money, after years of tutelage, squander part or perhaps all of their estate, but it would be the exception rather than the rule. I want to add here that there are in the Indian Territory more than 100,000 enrollments, and there are in the entire State about 117,000 Indians. It is also true that this is more than one-third of all the Indians in the United States to-day.

And while I have admitted that some of them would squander their money and estate, it is also true that if 100,000 white citizens had been all their lives bound down by federal restrictions and were then allowed to come into their own there would be certain of them that would squander and dispose of their property recklessly. Still, in the face of this none of us here would feel like advocating that it was the duty of the Federal Government to exercise guardianship over citizens of this character. The better and more common-sense doctrine would be to put them out on their own resources and responsibilities and let them accumulate experience the same as the rest of us have done in stepping from the parental roof out into the broad domain of manhood.

I tell you, my State is full of good men of Indian blood, and I am tired of having them treated like orphan children. I tell you, sir, we find them in all of the professions; we find them at the head of banking institutions; we find them employers of men and in full control of a vast amount of property that they have accumulated even in the face of the annoying yoke of federal supervision, often exercised by men who were theorists and wholly impractical. I tell you, the Indians have suffered from the theory and schemes that should not have been tried on a people that we owe as much to as we do to the Five Tribes.

Now, one word about the clause in this bill providing for further appropriation for administration of Indian affairs on the Five Tribes' side of the State. The Oklahoma delegation secured a clause in the last appropriation bill that all work of winding up the affairs of the Five Tribes was to be completed on or before July 1, 1910. Now, here they are with the same provision in the bill for further administration.

For sixteen long, weary years we have heard each year that they could finish the work and be ready to turn their property over to them at the succeeding year. How long, oh how long, will this continue? Will the present generation of the people of the Five Tribes have to go to their last sweet sleep still in bondage and still suffering under long-range government that they do not want or need? Will the theorists never let loose and let the practical step in? The Indians desire their money and their land as their own. The white people of the State also desire it. So why not give it to them and let them go?

Think of the thousands of tenants who have lived and reared an entire family for years waiting for a chance to buy a humble little home that they could call their own, waited and watched for the dawn of the new day when they could own that one green spot called "home." But now we learn that this Republican Congress must have a few fat jobs left to keep the boys feeling good, so they can smooth over the blunders of the President, who makes them with the rising and setting of each sun. How long must this class of poor tenants, who have lived there and helped make the country what it is, have to wait for a chance to own a little home?

When I came to Congress three years ago of the 19,000,000 acres of Indian land on the Five Tribes' side of the new State only 3,000,000 were taxable. Think what a deplorable condition this was. Few, if any, roads; few, if any, schoolhouses; no taxes to improve the roads or bridge the streams. A condition that was more deplorable than you know. I am proud that the first Congress after admission, when there were four stalwart Democrats out of a delegation of five in the House and two able and upright Senators of the Democratic persuasion, we released from this bondage about 9,000,000 acres of this land. I am proud that to-day in this House we find that every Democrat from that State is working for the sale of the surplus unallotted lands as hard as he can, and I am in hopes that the Republicans are doing an equal service.

It will be interesting to know if the three Republicans in the House who have full charge of the legislation will be able to accomplish half what was done by the four Democrats and one Republican. The three Republicans from the State all voted for the Speaker, who is the Czar of the House, and able to give or withhold legislative plums as he desires, and who will recognize these Republicans and do as well by them as the Democrats were able to do. I shall hope that it is so, and will give it my hearty support, and the victories will be welcome ones to the doors of the Republicans who have assumed command. It is a matter of no little rejoicing that both the Senators and the two House members on the Democratic side of the Chamber are working in the rear ranks and willing to do anything and everything to help, and unselfishly let the Republicans have the glory of any legislation that may come. We have no time nor desire to play politics. The State needs legislation, and she must have it.

I again repeat, Let the Indians of the five tribes alone, and let them live in peace, independence, and plenty by the side of their white brother. There is no animosity between the two races. We have one in this body and one in the other body at the other end of the Capitol, and we have them in the legislature, so it shows there is no prejudice, but peace and brotherhood instead. I rejoice that it is so.

Let this Congress and the department who have them in charge not hang on until their welcome is all gone, and by so doing arouse strife and discord between the two races who must of necessity and of right reside in the same State and enjoy the blessings as they flow from the development of the new State of Oklahoma.

Divide the money in the Treasury that belongs to them. Let them build better homes and restock their farms and their plantations. Release their lands from bondage and let them manage their own affairs. Sell the unallotted lands to actual settlers, so that the men who have lived there during the trying times incident to life in a new State may now come into their own by an opportunity to own a well improved and happy little home. Do this, and the Indian citizen will take on independence of character and will progress and improve as he has never done before. Take this action and take it now, and the State will thank you and remain under obligations such as words can not describe. Do this, and our State will see its first proud day. When you have done this you will have done much for them. This will be more to them than any gratuity you have or will ever make to them, for it is their right to become independent citizens of a sovereign State.

Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to debate the point of order. I do, however, desire to say a few words in reference to the merits of this proposed section. I want to refer to one or two statements of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] about which I believe he is in error. He suggested to the gentleman from Wisconsin that it was proper and right for his State to take care of the needy Indians. Now, it seems to me it would be a fair reply to that statement to say that the Indians are not taxed, and that being true, their land yields no revenue to the State, and it would be a hardship on the State to support the needy Indians as long as the Government retains full control of their land, money, and affairs.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has suggested that they have money to their credit. That is true and it is not true. Some Indians have and some have not. I suggest that though even some Indians have money to their credit they can not get it without congressional appropriation, and oftentimes during the interim of sessions of Congress and during the time when congressional appropriations and congressional aid can not be sought or accomplished the Indians would, in the absence of discretionary power in the hands of the commissioner, suffer. I do not believe the gentleman from Illinois or any other gentleman here, vigilant and economical as he always is, and as all of us should be, desires to see any suffering on the part of the Indians. He complains that each year we are appropriating large sums of money for the benefit of the Indian tribes. That is true. If one common balance could be struck between the American people and the Indian tribes, I believe the American people would be in the lead by far. I live in a county that has about 3,500 Indians, and most of them dependent Indians. They have some money in the Federal Treasury, so they come within the class mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois, but there are times of the year, between sessions of Congress and between payments, when those Indians in their present condition could not employ the aid of a physician or attorney or anybody else to look after their welfare, in the absence of some discretionary power on the part of the commissioner.

This word "Indian" covers a wide range. It includes both millionaires and paupers. I have Indians in my district who are worth hundreds of thousands of dollars, who could buy and sell myself and the ordinary Member here over and over again. I have others in my district who are penniless, dependent, and pitifully ignorant. So it is difficult in the extreme for the American Congress to apply the word "Indian" to all classes of Indian citizens and deal with it intelligently.

I am greatly in hopes that the gentleman will not insist on his point of order if it is good. For the benefit of those who do not think it is good, I do not want to concede that it is good.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is likely that any part of this appropriation would be used on the residents in his district who are so well to do as he mentioned?

Mr. FERRIS. Perhaps not. I will say to the gentleman, further, I made some inquiry of the commissioner with reference to this section of the bill myself, and his idea was to use a physician from the civil-service roll to properly care for the needy ones wherever found at interims between Congresses. I am perhaps more opposed to this bureau business than the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

I think we have too many bureaus now, and I look forward with no little rejoicing to the time when we shall have not half the Indian bureaus we have now. But as to this question of stamping out disease among Indians, I hope the gentleman will not apply his usual rigid economy to this section of the bill. Indians in my State have been made citizens of the State for all purposes by a provision in the enabling act admitting Oklahoma into the Union. The appropriations for schools in this bill have been pared down, and the policy of the department is to cut out Indian schools altogether as fast as they can. If the Indian schools are curtailed and eliminated, the Indian citizens must of necessity attend the same schools that the white ones do. With all reason and all fairness, if Indian citizens have permission and do actually attend the white schools, if they have tuberculosis, trachoma, and other noxious and contagious diseases, I do not believe the gentleman from Illinois, with all his spirit of economy and vigilance, wants such diseases spread among white people. The fact that Indians have lands they can not alienate in any way or money on deposit they can not get does not leave them self-supporting, but still dependent and deserving of care and assistance at the hands of the Federal Government, who have all their affairs in hand.

Mr. MANN. Well, does the gentleman think that by the same token we should look after the white tuberculous children in the same school with the Indians, side by side?

Mr. FERRIS. I take it that the whites are citizens, with all that the word implies.

Mr. MANN. So are the Indians. Does not the gentleman know they are in his own State?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; but the gentleman must recognize the fact that a citizen is not a real citizen, in all the term implies, until the citizen is able to sell his own land and have entire charge of the disposition of his own funds, even though there be a recital of citizenship on the statute books.

Mr. MANN. "The gentleman" does not admit anything of the kind. There are lots of other people who if they could not sell their possessions would be better off.

Mr. FERRIS. That is a good deal like a gentleman who believes in martyrs, but who always wants the other fellow to be the martyr.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman believe in taking care of the white tuberculosis cases by the Government in the State of Oklahoma as the Indian is to-day?

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, yes; I am in favor of helping the whites when needy, or any other helpless or dependent ones.

Mr. MANN. And have the General Government take care of them the same as they now do with the Indian citizens?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman uses the term of Indian citizens, when they are laboring under federal restrictions, so that they are really not citizens, and that is not a fair comparison.

Mr. MANN. Are not those federal restrictions in the interest of the Indian?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not want to admit that. While that is, of course, the theory, it is too often very untrue.

Mr. MANN. Is not the whole proposition that this is to be in the interest of the Indians?

Mr. FERRIS. You can not get 80 per cent of the Indians in my State to admit that.

Mr. MANN. Do you admit that they would not have had much property left for themselves if it had not been for federal restriction?

Mr. FERRIS. On that point I have some very pronounced views, and when the gentleman asks me the question as to whether the Indians would be better off to have their money tied up by federal restrictions, and to have bureaus issuing their own money out to them 5 cents at a time at intervals when they do not need it, and not giving it to them when they do need it, I say the Indians do not want to be tied and bound down in that way. The gentleman suggests that if they were allowed to part with the land they would all have lost their land. That is not the fact. Some of them would.

I submit that if we were to apply the same federal restriction and the same tutelage over the white citizens in equal numbers, the chances are that many of them would grow as dependent as the Indians. The sooner the Indians are thrown on their own resources the better, in my judgment.

Mr. MANN. Is not the real argument in favor of this proposition the fact that there are some needy Indians who do not own property of their own? Has not that condition come in every case because of the lack of certain federal restrictions in the past; and is not all the argument now that we should support these needy Indians because they have no property, and at the same time remove federal restrictions so that in the future they may not own property?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman's analysis is hardly fair. He does not consider misfortune, accident, and the countless thousands of ways of losing property other than by improvidency.

Mr. GOULDEN. Can the gentleman from Oklahoma tell me, the House, and the committee what proportion, percentage, of the Indians are citizens, taking advantage of the suffrage given them by the State of Oklahoma?

Mr. FERRIS. As heretofore said, they are all made citizens by the enabling act. Well, to answer just how many vote would be difficult. The Chickasaw tribe, part of whom are in my district, practically every man among them over 21 years of age exercises that right. Of the Kiowa and Comanche citizens, who live in my county and in my neighborhood, I do not believe 1 per cent of them do so.

I have stated it with reasonable accuracy, so far as those Indians in my district are concerned; but it is unfair to believe that certain rules should apply to all Indians, because a rule that is applicable to the Indian who is destitute and penniless and not educated, and has not even the ability to speak the English language, is not a fair rule to apply to Indians worth millions of dollars and educated as well or better than the ordinary citizen.

Mr. GOULDEN. How many Indians are there in Oklahoma?

Mr. FERRIS. One hundred and one thousand enrollments of the Five Civilized Tribes, and as to other Indians there are approximately 17,000 of them. I am accurate about the Civilized Tribes, but am approximating on the scattering tribes. About one-third of all the Indians in the United States are in Oklahoma. The States need these matters wound up very badly. It has been long delayed. If all their force must be employed somewhere, send them to Panama. Do not always make a dumping ground of Oklahoma for politicians you do not need, care for, or want. Have the Department of Justice dismiss those 30,000 asinine suits that have resulted in untold injury and depreciation of the Indians' property and estate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from South Dakota upon what authority he claims this appropriation to be based?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in the first instance, I take the position that we have jurisdiction to make appropriations for the care and support of our Indian wards, as this proposes. Existing law contains appropriations for these same purposes and we find $12,000 to prevent the spread of the disease of trachoma among Indians in the act approved February 20, 1909, in the Thirty-fifth Statutes, page 642, and this is simply to supplement that appropriation to carry out this particular purpose.

The money that has heretofore been appropriated is practically all expended, and it seems to me if we can not make this appropriation, we can not make appropriation for the care, support, civilization, and education of the Indian. It all turns upon this question. If we can not make appropriations for the care and health of our Indian wards, then we can not make appropriations to feed, clothe, educate, and protect them generally.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the answer to that is that we do not do it at all. We maintain Indian schools, and they are not subject to a point of order, because a school is a work in progress. An item on an appropriation bill to build a new school or start a new school is subject to a point of order, as everyone knows. As I understand it, there is no general authority authorizing us to appropriate any money that we please for the maintenance of the Indians. We appropriate money under treaty, where the treaty provides for an appropriation, and we appropriate money for certain specified purposes that are provided by law, or are for carrying out the work that we are now doing, such as the maintenance of a school that has been provided by law.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. PARSONS. Under the law as you contend it is, what authority is there for the employing of a physician at an agency? And if you can employ a physician at an agency, why then is not this appropriation in order?

Mr. MANN. I do not consider that asking a question does any good. I do not undertake to say what the authority is for the employment of physicians at agencies. I doubt whether they are employed, except with the use of the Indian funds. The agency proposition, as a rule, is for the expenditure of the money of the Indians, not of the General Government.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Nearly every agency physician is provided for in the treaty with each particular tribe. These treaties provide not only for the physicans, but for the number of blacksmiths, carpenters, and other mechanics that shall be placed there for their instruction.

Mr. MANN. We do not appropriate out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Under authority of law the Secretary of the Interior is charged with the supervision of all business growing out of our Indian relations, and it would seem to me that appropriations certainly are in order to enable him properly to discharge the duties of that position; and if this point of order is to be sustained, practically every appropriation in this bill, with the possible exception of a few treaty provisions, may go out on the precedent established.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is unduly alarmed about that. I will undertake to argue the point of order from his side and keep most of his provisions in the bill, whether this one goes out or not. The matters are not the same at all. There are quite a number of items in the gentleman's bill that are subject to the point of order, and some of them are exceedingly good items, and I will not undertake to say that any of them are bad items, unless it be this one. This one is an extremely costly item, if it is to stay in the bill.

I wish the gentleman himself would reflect upon what would happen if the Government should undertake to allot the lands of Indians and then follow the position of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGUIRE], which will soon come, that the Government permit the land to be sold, permit the whites to get the property away from the Indians, and then put upon the Government the onus of caring for the Indians, on the ground that they have no property with which to take care of themselves. That is the identical proposition now before the committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This bill contains a number of gratuities not authorized by law, subject to a point of order, and carried because Members do not make the point of order. The bill carries appropriations for the expenses of the Indian Bureau, to carry out provisions of treaties, and nearly all of the items in this bill are provided for because treaties have been made with the particular Indians affected, or some specific authorization has at some time or other been made for the work.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let me say to the gentleman along that line that we have a treaty with the Sioux Indians in the Dakotas, made in 1877, that obligates the Government, until such time as they may become self-supporting, to care for them, feed them, clothe them; and certainly that would give us authority to take care of their health, and to spend money to suppress contagious diseases.

That treaty is still in full force and effect.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from South Dakota refer the Chair to a copy of that treaty?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will send to the Chair article 5 of the treaty of 1877, which is still in force.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not propose to appropriate and carry out the treaty with the Sioux. This is an appropriation generally for the benefit of the Indian.

Mr. MANN. There may be 40 treaties, Mr. Chairman, and it might be possible to make an appropriation to carry out the provisions of those treaties, but the reading of this provision and the purpose of the provision is a very different thing.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in response to what the gentleman has said in regard to the Indian losing his land and then becoming a charge on the Federal Government, I want to say that I am and have always been opposed to the Indian being permitted to sell his land, of having a fee simple patent to it, until he is competent to manage his own affairs. And when that time comes then I am in favor of giving him everything that may be his due. If he loses it let him take his chances the same as the rest of the citizens of this country do, and when he is in the condition of a pauper let him be a charge upon the State in which he resides.

I want to say, for the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois and others who may be laboring under a misconception of Indian character, that my observation has been that Indians who have been permitted to take charge of their own affairs after they were found to be competent have exceeded the average white man in taking care of what he has. Experience shows that the average "competent" Indian will take care of his property better than the average white man; and just as long as he is capable and competent of taking charge of his own affairs I am in favor of taking the hand of the Government from him and letting him take his chances.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from South Dakota yield for a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. About what proportion of the Indian allottees now have unrestricted power to alienate their land?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Outside of the Five Civilized Tribes it would be a very small percentage. Among the Sioux Indians it would be not more than 2 or 3 per cent. Perhaps among the Sissetons and Wahpetons it might be 5 per cent.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman know anything as to the number of Indian allottees who, after acquiring their allotments, have immediately, or within a very short time, disposed of their lands to the white men?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do know of such instances, and I have known of white men who came into possession of something without effort on their part, who have inherited fortunes, to get rid of it very quickly. I do not think the Indian differs very much in this respect from the white man.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Section 2 of Rule XXI declares that—

> No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of such public works or objects as are already in progress.

Is there any authority of law for this proposed expenditure for the relief of Indians in distress?

The Chair finds in the Revised Statutes, after a hurried examination, that there is statutory authority for the education of Indians, for schools, and so forth, but not, as far as the Chair is able to discover or has been informed, for the relief of distress among the Indians or supplying them with medicines.

In the so-called "Black Hills treaty," which has been sent to the Chair, there is a provision that the Government will furnish supplies for the parties to this agreement who are unable to sustain themselves. That would clearly provide for relief of distress for such Indians as are parties to this treaty, and there may be other similar treaties.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the Chair to say that the obligation to the Indians referred to is to be made under the conditions of the treaty and not out of the Treasury of the United States?

The CHAIRMAN. The language is that the Government will aid said Indians, but it refers only to the parties to this treaty. There may be other treaties, or many of them, containing similar provisions. If this paragraph in the bill were confined to Indians parties to such treaties, the Chair would have no difficulty in sustaining it; but it seems to be general in its terms, relating to all Indians whether parties to any such treaty or not, and therefore in violation of the rule, which says that no appropriation for an expenditure not previously authorized by law shall be in order. Previous appropriations have been made for similar purposes, no point of order having been made against them. They were made only for one year and for a specific sum, and that does not afford any authority for any further expenditure as proposed here. The Chair has been trying to find if it could be sustained as in continuation of a public work in progress, but it seems clearly to fall within the precedents which hold the other way, as cited in No. 26 of volume 6, Hinds's Precedents, page 110. In December, 1900, when the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration Mr. JOSEPH G. CANNON, of Illinois, made a point of order against a paragraph appropriating "for the support and civilization" of Indians, and the point was sustained upon the ground that there was no statute or treaty authorizing the expenditure and that it was not to continue a public work in progress.

No matter how meritorious or desirable it may be, the Chair may not consider the merits of the proposition, but must be governed by the rules. The point of order must therefore be sustained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, I would not make a point of order on the proposition to appropriate $10,000 for vaccine, vaccination, or the prevention of trachoma.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, that appropriation would practically amount to nothing, and if the House is not willing to take the judgment of the committee, which believes that this amount is the least that will serve the purpose, I do not care to accept the insignificant amount suggested by the gentleman.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GRIEST having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On February 15, 1910:

H. R. 11307. An act to legalize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Hill City, Aitkin County, Minn.;

H. R. 12289. An act to authorize the city of Minneapolis, in the State of Minnesota, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi in said city;

H. R. 13438. An act to declare One Hundred and Two River in Missouri nonnavigable;

H. R. 13439. An act to declare Nodaway River in Missouri nonnavigable;

H. R. 13440. An act to declare Big Tarkio River in Holt and Atchison counties, Mo., nonnavigable;

H. R. 16221. An act for the establishment of telephone service between the life-saving station at Two Rivers, Wis., and the light-house at Twin River Point, Wisconsin;

H. R. 17161. An act to authorize the Union Railroad and Dock Company to construct and operate a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of West Virginia;

H. R. 16311. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 17743. An act to authorize Clay County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Current River.

On February 16, 1910:

H. R. 18895. An act to authorize the Wilson and Glassport Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Monongahela River between Wilson and Glassport boroughs, Allegheny County, Pa.; and

H. R. 19399. An act to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo., by the St. Louis Electric Bridge Company.

On February 17, 1910:

H. R. 12438. An act to amend sections 7 and 8 of the act of May 29, 1908, entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect."

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams, purchase and use of irrigation tools and appliances, water rights, lands necessary for canals, pipe lines and reservoirs for Indian reservations and allotments, and for drainage and protection of irrigable lands from damage by floods, $240,000, of which $25,000 shall be immediately available, and the balance of the appropriation shall remain available until expended: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended on any irrigation system or reclamation project for which specific appropriation is made in this act or for which public funds are or may be available under any other act of Congress, and no new irrigation project to be paid for wholly or in part from this appropriation shall be undertaken until it shall have been estimated for and a maximum limit of cost ascertained from surveys, plans, and reports submitted by the chief irrigation engineer in the Indian Service and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and no new project to cost in the aggregate to exceed $25,000 shall be undertaken on any Indian reservation or allotment without specific authority of Congress; and the Secretary of the Interior shall transmit to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1910, a statement, by systems or projects, showing the original estimated cost, the present estimated cost, and the total amount of all moneys, from whatever source derived, expended thereon for construction, extension, repair, or maintenance, of each irrigation system or reclamation project on Indian reservations to and including June 30, 1910; and annually thereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall transmit to Congress a cost account of all moneys, from whatever source derived, expended on each such irrigation project for the preceding fiscal year, but nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit reasonable expenditures from this appropriation for preliminary surveys and investigations to determine the feasibility and estimated cost of new projects, or to prevent the Bureau of Indian Affairs from having the benefit of cooperation and consultation with engineers in other branches of the public service or carrying out existing cooperative agreements with the Reclamation Service; for pay of one inspector of irrigation, who shall be a skilled irrigation engineer, $3,500; one assistant inspector of irrigation, who shall be a skilled irrigation engineer, $2,500; not to exceed 5 superintendents of irrigation, who shall be skilled irrigation engineers, at not to exceed $2,000 per annum each, $10,000; for traveling expenses of 2 inspectors of irrigation, at $3 per diem when actually employed on duty in the field, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-car fare, in lieu of all other expenses authorized by law, and for incidental expenses of negotiation, inspection, and investigation, including telegraphing and expense of going to and from the seat of government, and while remaining there under orders, $3,000; in all, $259,800.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph, although I do it with some tremulation after the evident feeling displayed by the gentleman over the last paragraph not remaining in the bill exactly as it came from his committee. Perhaps the gentleman thinks that the Members of the House ought not to consider an appropriation bill when it is brought from his committee, and yet even at the risk of the condemnation of the gentleman I shall call his attention to a few propositions in this paragraph.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I can only state to the gentleman that since 1891 Congress has been appropriating large sums of money for irrigation purposes upon Indian reservations. Since that time there have been expended $1,500,000. The appropriation for 1911 is the same as that for 1910. There was a deficiency appropriation, I believe, of $50,000, if I remember, and the expenditures are being made on projects on reservations in eight or ten different States and Territories. As to the law that authorizes it, the fact that we found that appropriations had been made from year to year for about twenty-five years was sufficient to lead us to assume that Congress had given its sanction to this class of legislation.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any law authorizing it, but I have no objection to that part of it. I have no objection to any part of the amendment, I may say to the gentleman, or the purpose of it in any respect. I think the proposition which the gentleman has submitted in this paragraph is an exceedingly good proposition, but I question whether it accomplishes all that was in the gentleman's mind. I would like to ask the gentleman first, as a matter of detail, where he gets the total amount of $259,800?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The estimate was $200,000——

Mr. MANN. I know; but the items in the paragraph do not foot up that amount.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If they do not it is a typographical error. I am not aware of the fact that they do not figure up in that way.

Mr. MANN. I will ask the gentleman first whether there is a necessity for providing in this item for the construction of dams?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think there is.

Mr. MANN. It never has been carried before in the Indian appropriation, although they have done a great deal of construction and reservoir work. What is the special reason for giving authority to construct dams?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Simply in connection with the storing of water. It is necessary to construct dams.

Mr. MANN. Well, if they can construct a reservoir that carries a dam with it, but the construction of a dam does not necessarily carry a reservoir with it. Now, they have had the authority for years to construct reservoirs, but not the authority to construct dams.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think that was put in on the suggestion that there was some particular work where it was necessary to construct a dam, independent of a reservoir, and that word was added to the legislation that has heretofore been in the bill.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I have just figured up the total as found in this paragraph and it coincides, if I am correct, with $259,000.

Mr. MANN. Two hundred and fifty-nine thousand dollars is right; but they just threw in the odd $800 for good measure. I wondered why it was so.

Mr. HAMER. I would like to state for the information of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], if he is not aware of that fact, that a dam is sometimes necessary for the sole purpose of diverting the water from the stream for the purposes of irrigation, even where a reservoir is not needed.

Mr. MANN. I am aware of that fact. That is what I stated. I asked whether there was any necessity for dams here. But this is really what I want to get from the gentleman. On line 8 of page 4 is the provision:

And no new irrigation project to be paid for wholly or in part from this appropriation shall be undertaken until it shall have been estimated for and a maximum limit of cost—

And so forth.

Why not make that a permanent provision of law and provide that hereafter no new irigation projects on any Indian reservation or allotment shall be undertaken, and so forth?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that it was the intention of the committee to make it law and I suppose the word "hereafter" was in there until my attention was called to the fact that it is not. I think it is manifest to everyone, as it is to the gentleman from Illinois, that the provision is a wise one and ought to remain in the bill.

Mr. MANN. I certainly think——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. But I am arguing the point of order now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to reserve the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Well, I will not reserve the point of order. I will argue the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman upon the point of order.

Mr. MANN. And then I would like, with the permission of the Chair, to ask the gentleman about the same language in line 14. I would suggest to the gentleman, if he can follow it, after the word "Interior," if that is made permanent law, in line 14, there should be inserted "and such limit of cost shall in no case be exceeded without the express authorization of Congress." I take it that the purpose of the proposition is to obtain a limit of cost and then keep the expenses of that system within the limit of cost, unless Congress authorizes it to be increased.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. May I call the gentleman's attention to the proviso? The first limitation which is found in line 8 is intended to apply to this particular appropriation. Then in line 14 we say:

And no project to cost in the aggregate to exceed $25,000 shall be undertaken on any Indian reservation or allotment without specific authority of Congress.

Now, does not that paragraph become general legislation if it is enacted?

Mr. MANN. Well, I think I can explain my point to the gentleman very quickly, and I am sure he will appreciate it. The second provision is that no new irrigation project shall be reported without authority of Congress.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But that authority comes through a mere appropriation. The first proviso is that no new irrigation project shall be reported until there has been a survey and an estimate of cost. Congress may have authorized the project under the second proviso where the first proviso would not apply, and now to make it apply is it not wise to say that there shall be no further irrigation projects without an authorization of Congress and an estimate of cost by the department, which estimate of cost shall not be exceeded except by authority of Congress?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that the change suggested by the gentleman is very important, and certainly it is not objectionable. It seems to me that the two provisos, or the two parts of the proviso, accomplish exactly what he indicates, one being applicable to the present appropriation and the other that there shall be no further irrigation projects undertaken costing more than $25,000 until they shall have been specifically authorized by Congress, and that means by some legislation other than a mere appropriation.

Mr. MANN. But it is always done on appropriation bills. You have got a lot of these same authorizations in this bill. Now, there is no limitation here as to the cost unless you put it specifically in the bill. You provide for so much money to commence an irrigation project, and I take it from the gentleman's bill that he wants it fixed so that there shall be a limitation of cost and the estimated cost unless Congress shall otherwise provide, and I would suggest to the gentleman that he put that in the way I have suggested, or some other way like that, so it becomes the permanent law, and certainly then it will be far easier to get the appropriation, if there be need, for that purpose.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman indicate just exactly what his amendment is?

Mr. MANN. The proposition I have was to insert, after the word "and," in line 8, the word "hereafter," and to strike out the words, after the word "project," "to be paid for wholly or in part from this appropriation" and insert in lieu thereof the words "on any Indian reservation or allotment." If that is the proper language, and I take it it will be, so it will read:

And hereafter no new irrigation project on any Indian reservation or allotment shall be undertaken until it shall have been estimated for, etc.

And then, after the word "Interior," in line 19, insert—

And such limit of cost shall in no case be exceeded without the express authorization of Congress.

Then add, after the word "and," in line 14, the word "hereafter." That makes it permanent law.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I can not see, Mr. Chairman, as that improves it particularly, but it is, as I have said, unobjectionable.

Mr. MANN. That accomplishes the purpose which I think the gentleman wants to accomplish.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If it does not accomplish it in the language in which it appears in the bill, I am willing to have this amendment inserted; but it seems to me that it does that very thing.

Mr. MANN. It is certain the language in the bill only applies to this appropriation, to begin with.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. From line 14 to line 17, including the word "Congress," does the gentleman mean to say that only applies to this particular appropriation?

Mr. MANN. Unless you put in the word "hereafter."

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he thinks his amendment would entirely accomplish that for which he is aiming, and that this language after the word "and," in line 14, "and no new project to exceed in the aggregate $25,000 shall be undertaken on any Indian reservation or allotment without specific authority of Congress?"

Would it not be possible under the language "no new project to cost in the aggregate" to begin a new project without any express authority of Congress, and then thereafter come to Congress and obtain the necessary appropriation to complete it? Would it not be better to say "and no new project the completion of which shall cost to exceed a certain sum?"

Mr. MANN. If you put the two items together so that no new project can be commenced hereafter without authority of Congress, and then make the other part of it read so that before the project is undertaken it shall be estimated for and the maximum limit of cost ascertained, put in the language that I have mentioned, that estimate can not be exceeded without authority of Congress, while under the provision as it now stands, while it requires an authority of Congress to commence a project, there is absolutely no limit to the amount of money which may be spent upon it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let me suggest again to the gentleman that the word "and" in line 8 applies only to this appropriation. Now, in line 14, after the word "Interior," if the word "hereafter" is inserted, then will it not provide that in the future no new project to cost in the aggregate to exceed $25,000 shall be undertaken on any Indian reservation or allotment without specific authority of Congress? Does not that cover all the gentleman desires to cover?

Mr. MANN. That does not cover the question of making an estimate and survey and the maximum limit of cost. If it is proper to put into this bill a provision that irrigation work shall not be undertaken until it is estimated for, and maximum limit of cost, then it seems to me it is proper to make it so it will apply to appropriations hereafter made. It is in this bill, now subject to a point of order. It is a good provision. All I am asking is to make it permanent law.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then, does the gentleman mean that, after the word "undertaken," in lines 15 and 16, he would insert:

Until it shall have been estimated for and the maximum limit of cost ascertained from surveys, plans, and reports submitted by the chief irrigation engineer in the Indian Service and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. MANN. That possibly would cover it, but I thought it would be better to take the language which the gentleman has in his bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is the language.

Mr. MANN. I will read to the gentleman the way I have it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let us see how the gentleman has it.

Mr. MANN. Commencing in line 8:

Hereafter no new irrigation project on any Indian reservation or allotment shall be undertaken until it shall have been estimated for, and a maximum limit of cost ascertained from surveys, plans, and reports submitted by the chief irrigation engineer in the Indian Service and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and such limit of cost shall in no case be exceeded without express authorization of Congress. And hereafter no new project which shall cost in the aggregate to exceed $25,000 shall be undertaken on any Indian reservation or allotment without specific authority of Congress.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am willing to accept the amendment suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. It carries out the purpose of the gentleman.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The purpose of the committee is expressed in the bill as it stands, but if the House wishes to go further and make all of these provisions permanent I am sure it will be entirely agreeable to the committee which framed the bill.

Mr. MANN. I appreciate the fact the gentleman only made it available for one year. The language is well chosen, and it seems to me desirable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not care to hear further debate on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to make the point of order against the language on page 4, lines 1, 2, 3, and 4:

Of which $25,000 shall be immediately available, and the balance of the appropriation shall remain available until expended.

This is not only a deficiency, but it provides for a permanent appropriation. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the vice of this manner of appropriating money. There are two statutes which provide severe penalties for the incurring of deficiencies except under certain circumstances. When deficiencies are incurred the department must certify the reasons for making the deficiencies. Under this practice of making current appropriations, or appropriations for the next fiscal year, immediately available, the department saves the difficulty of coming to Congress and asking for a deficiency, and it is enabled to avoid the law which was enacted to prevent deficiencies. Making these appropriations available until expended not only provides money for the next ensuing fiscal year, but it is putting to the credit of the various departments money which may not be expended for many years. There is no reason to except this bureau from the act of Congress, or for giving it the money required beyond the fiscal year, than there is any other bureau of the Government.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this is clearly subject to the point of order; and if the gentleman insists on the point, there is no use of discussing it, and I am ready for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist upon the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman insists upon the point of order as to making these balances of appropriation available until expended, I would like to call the gentleman's attention to this proposition, which I am sure he will appreciate: I agree with him about making immediately available these appropriations; but this irrigation work is very largely done under contract. The appropriation for the next fiscal year will not be available until July 1. It is quite out of the question to expend all of that money under any contract for irrigation work within the next fiscal year if the contract is properly made. It is very much like river and harbor improvements, or other improvements of that sort, where the appropriation is made to be expended under contract. It ought to remain available until it can be expended. We provide in the fortification bill for the purchase of certain classes of fortifications, where it remains available until expended, because it is not possible to expend it within the year in which it is appropriated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is this work done by contract?

Mr. MANN. It is nearly all done by contract.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the money is obligated under contract, it remains available for two years.

Mr. MANN. It may remain available, and it may not remain available for two years. The work can not all be done under contract. The work is done in the same way, largely, as the river and harbor improvements and works of that sort. Is it not advisable to leave it so that the money can be available until expended?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is not quite accurate. This money is appropriated not only for works already under way, but some of the appropriation is to be expended for surveys or in investigations to determine the feasibility of new irrigation projects.

Mr. MANN. I understand the item might be better differentiated, as to whether there ought not to be some sum available to some thing rather than through a number of places in this bill in reference to all projects of that kind. Now, it seems to me that if we appropriate $150,000 for a certain irrigation project which can not properly be differentiated, then it is necessary that the appropriation of money be made full, for the purpose of making a limit of cost in reference to it, and that it is desirable not to reappropriate it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This does not put a limit of cost upon anything, and there is no reason why this bureau should not come to Congress annually, as every other bureau of the Government does.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I did not understand that the gentleman from New York made a point of order to lines 3 and 4; I thought it was to line 2.

Mr. FITZGERALD. To both.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order as to lines 3 and 4.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the money is not to be expended in the coming fiscal year, what objection is there to the point of order?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This work is being done in very large part by Indian labor, and it seems to me that the unexpended appropriations ought to be available, the same as for river and harbor work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You can reappropriate the money next year. Congress ought to be able to tell, some time or other, how much money is being spent each year in various projects and kinds of work. It does not interfere with the progress of the work.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This bill contemplates that at the next session of this Congress we will know where every dollar of this money is expended.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman is to be complimented upon the efforts he is making to accomplish that, and I think by restricting these appropriations to the year for which they are made it will help him materially.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I reserve the point of order on the portion of the bill beginning with line 11, on page 5, and ending with line 2, on page 6, for the pay of one inspector of irrigation, and so forth. Has it been customary to carry that officer heretofore on Indian appropriation bills?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It has, in a separate item.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I was unable to find it in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It is in the last appropriation act. This inspector and two engineers were appropriated for separately.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The same offices have been appropriated for heretofore, have they?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They have.

Mr. COX of Indiana. At the same salaries?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. There is no increase?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No increase.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the paragraph, simply to perfect it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 4, strike out the comma and the word "but," after the word "year," and insert in lieu thereof a colon and the words "Provided further, That."

In line 8 strike out the word "operation."

In line 9 strike out the word "and."

In line 10 strike out the word "cooperative."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendments will be considered together.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to correct the total by inserting before the word "dollars," in line 1, on page 6, the words "eight hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 1, after "thousand," insert "eight hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, line 8, after the word "and," insert "hereafter." After the word "project" strike out "paid for wholly or in part from this appropriation" and insert "on any Indian reservation, allotments, or lands."

In line 14, after the word "and," insert "hereafter," and after the word "Interior" insert "and such limit of cost shall in no case be exceeded without express authorization of Congress."

In line 24, after the word "reservation," insert "allotments or lands."

Several MEMBERS. Let it be read as proposed to be amended.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will read the paragraph as proposed to be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended on any irrigation system or reclamation projects for which specific appropriation is made in this act or for which public funds are or may be available under any other act of Congress, and hereafter no new irrigation project on any Indian reservation, allotments, or lands shall be undertaken until it shall have been estimated for and a maximum limit of cost ascertained from surveys, plans, and reports submitted by the chief irrigation engineer in the Indian Service and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and such limit of cost shall in no case be exceeded without express authorization of Congress, and hereafter no new project, to cost in the aggregate to exceed $25,000, shall be undertaken on any Indian reservation or allotment without specific authority of Congress; and the Secretary of the Interior shall transmit to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1910, a statement, by systems or projects, showing the original estimated cost, the present estimated cost, and the total amount of all moneys, from whatever source derived, expended thereon for construction, extension, repair, or maintenance of each irrigation system or reclamation project on Indian reservations, allotments, or lands to and including June 30, 1910.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the several amendments will be considered together. The question is upon agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, not otherwise provided for, and for other educational and industrial purposes, $1,420,000.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill [Mr. BURKE] a few questions. I notice in all the similar provisions following in other sections that no specific amount is mentioned for the salaries of school-teachers. I would ask if the gentleman has it in his power to give, offhand, the amount to be paid to the teachers?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I should say that the teachers' pay, as I recall it, is about as follows: For the superintendent of the school, $1,800; and it then runs down to $700, $800, $900, $1,000, $1,200, and $1,400—there are only a very few of them who receive the $1,400 or $1,600.

Mr. SHARP. What is the pay of the lady teachers, other than the principal?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The lady teachers in the ordinary Indian school get from $50 to $60 per month.

Mr. SHARP. What has been the policy during the last two years as to increasing that amount, or has it remained stationary?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There has not been any marked increase in the salary. There may have been some increase, but not anything material.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I asked these questions because I desire to bring to the attention of the House some comments which were made a few days ago upon the pay received by the government teachers in the Indian schools, and also that I may be enabled to contrast the pay received by this class of employees with the compensation paid to workers in other fields of labor.

I notice in a press dispatch sent out from this city a few days ago that the Civil Service Commission was confronted with the problem of a dearth of teachers in these Indian schools. It was stated that the greatest necessity existed for male teachers who are married to take charge of the day schools. Naturally, nearly all of these schools are located in the West and Southwest. For such work, the information was further given that $60 per month for a ten months' school year was usually paid; and, further, the wife of the teacher fortunate enough to pass the examination might be housekeeper at $30 per month in addition.

Though I am pleased to see that one of the chief amounts carried in this appropriation is to be devoted to the care and education of the Indians, yet I wish to say that I note with regret the gentleman's statement that the teacher's pay has remained about the same. When the District of Columbia bill was up for consideration several weeks ago I took a great deal of interest in its provisions with reference to the salaries paid to the teachers in this city, and I gave the subject no little attention at that time. For several years past I have felt very strongly upon this subject of pay of teachers, and in this connection I may say I have been not a little interested to read what perhaps most of the Members of this House have read in the last few days—the comments by the press-styled "multimillionaire," Richard T. Crane, of Chicago, upon the salaries of teachers and what he terms the "wastefulness of money in their employment." The press dispatches, though I do not vouch for their accuracy, quote the gentleman as saying:

The college men talk as though they knew all about every other man's business and that they could manage affairs better than the business men themselves.

College professors and teachers are prepared to give advice on all subjects. As $2,500 a year teachers, they tell us how to turn out $5,000 and $10,000 a year business men. Isn't it a bit strange that it never has occurred to these smart college men to go into business for themselves?

Why draw a small salary for telling young men how to draw big salaries if you are capable of drawing the big salary yourself?

I understand that the remarks above quoted are contained in a book recently written by Mr. Crane, and I trust that the context so modifies them that they do not reflect his unqualified opinion of the teachers and their work. Unfortunately, in this day of materialism a man's success in life and his services to his fellow-men are too often gauged by the income he receives; and it is far too apparent that, judged by this standard alone, the contempt which is expressed in the book for the small-salaried professor and teacher might be justified. With such a yardstick by which to measure men's achievements how far down the scale, indeed, would be such a man as Louis Agassiz, the greatest teacher of his age, who, though at times in his earlier career sorely pressed by poverty, yet to a friend who once asked him why, with his great knowledge of scientific truths, he did not better his financial condition, replied that he had no time to make money.

Within the past few days the sporting columns of our newspapers have informed us that the head of one of the baseball leagues had been voted a salary of $25,000 a year on a twenty-year tenure of office. While the usual latitude must be allowed for the accuracy of such news items, it but reflects the tendency of the times to pay the highest compensation for that class of talent which yields in return the greatest number of dollars. While the baseball fans upon this floor will agree with me that no question as to such trifling matters as salary need be asked to reward the man who carries away the pennant for his club or league, yet, because of the high salaries paid to such men, must they be considered five times as great in the scale of public esteem and worth as our best-paid college professors and school superintendents? By the same criterion the accidental possessor of a fine voice, backed by judicious advertising, who can command $100 for a single song must indeed be nearly at the top of such a scale.

Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunately true that school-teachers and college professors, as the author of the book states, receive the most modest compensation; but he might have gone further, and with equal truth have said that fully three-fourths of all the teachers in our public schools receive less than half the salary of $2,500 which he mentions. Educational reports of recent years exhaustively treat upon this subject, and valuable statistics have been compiled from reports of many cities and towns, but in the following table I will only summarize the general results obtained. The figures given are taken from the report of a committee, of which Carroll D. Wright was chairman, appointed by the National Educational Association. The personnel of this committee entitles its report to the highest credit, and while it was made nearly five years ago, subsequent statistics on the subject, as far as obtainable, show but little change. The original report, from which I give this epitome of results, embraced nearly 500 cities and towns in the United States, specified by name, and having a population ranging from that of New York City to the smaller towns of 8,000 or more inhabitants.

	High schools—principals and teachers.		Elementary schools—principals and teachers.
	Number.	Average salary.	Number.	Average salary.
New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia	1,248	$1,676	20,186	$967

58 cities, 30,000 to 50,000	875	912	7,401	558
60 cities, 15,000 to 20,000	561	869	3,498	515
110 cities, 10,000 to 15,000	804	787	4,859	482
87 cities, 8,000 to 10,000	571	721	2,945	464
Total number of teachers and principals	8,611		76,531

An examination of this table shows that of the better-paid class of principals and teachers in the high schools more than two-thirds receive less than $1,200 per year, while in the other class of elementary schools nearly three-fourths receive less than $750 per year.

But unfavorable as is this showing, it must be kept in mind that these reports have to do with the better paid teachers in the cities and larger towns, where quite a remarkably fine discrimination is shown in grading these salaries according to the population of the places. When, however, we come to consider the compensation paid to that large class of teachers employed in the typical ungraded rural schools, we must reduce the lowest salary paid in the town school, as indicated in the table just quoted—say that of $460—by nearly one-third. In other words, an examination of official reports from these rural districts in nearly all of our States will show an average salary paid to this class of teachers of less than $350.

We are wont to boast of our great men whose early and sometimes sole education came from the little red country schoolhouse. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we have never properly appreciated the fact that the development of character and mind that in after years has characterized these successful men is due in no small measure to the little woman or young man who taught in those schools, or that the leaders of public life, some of whom come to these Halls of Congress, as well as others who advance into Mr. Crane's class of multimillionaires, and still others who accomplish our great engineering feats and lead in scientific research, are so much indebted to the early impetus, training, and inspiration received in these little red schoolhouses. [Applause.]

But there is another phase involved in considering this subject of salaries paid to our teachers. I refer to its economic side, which, strange to say, while considered in almost every other vocation, has been given almost no prominence when applied to that of teaching. I refer to the cost of living, a much-discussed subject at the present time. While it is conceded that the very nature of the profession of pedagogy has to do with the mental rather than the mere material and physical conditions in life, yet even that development is not along such purely ethereal lines, I believe, as will enable the devotee to subsist upon abstruse problems of philosophy without a fair amount of food and clothing to go with it. Apropos of this phase, let me take the liberty to again quote from the report of the commission above mentioned, which is the expression of the conviction of the members of that committee after having given many months to a careful and exhaustive examination of all the questions involved.

On page 6 of that report I read as follows:

> In connection with this report on the salaries of teachers it should be observed that the salaried employee is always at a disadvantage in periods of prosperity and high prices, as salaries are much slower to advance than prices or wages. The salaried employee with a stationary income must not only pay the higher prices, but he almost of necessity follows his neighbor, more fortunate in an increased income from the prosperous times, in an indulgence in larger expenditures. Salaried employees must live according to the standard of those around them, and this is especially true of teachers. All their social life is in the public view, and the public has a peculiar interest in the maintenance of their social position.
> One of the most striking developments of recent years in connection with city schools is in the exacting nature of the requirements for teachers. Such requirements are becoming more and more severe. The idea that any high-school graduate can teach school has quite generally been succeeded by the conviction that no person, however well educated generally, can properly teach without special preparation for that duty. The higher standards which are being insisted upon for the teachers must lead logically to better compensation. The inadequacy of the salaries in some of the cities, as shown by this report, after the training that is necessary to secure the positions, has been used successfully as an argument for their increase, and in some cities it has been admitted where financial reasons have stood in the way of granting an advance.

In these days of progress it is expected that teachers, especially in the graded schools, will keep abreast of the times in all that pertains to that vocation. To this end teachers' institutes and different kinds of associations have been formed with the view to improve the quality of work which the teacher is called upon to do. Having no convenient time during the school year to hold such meetings or conventions, a portion of the summer months is devoted to that work. At these institutes a wide and most ambitious range of subjects is discussed, and the features take the form of learned papers and addresses by men higher up in pedagogy. The up-to-date teacher is expected to attend such conventions and participate therein in nearly every case at his own expense, which often involves no little amount. I think I do not exaggerate when I say that to such organizations, formed for the unselfish and sole purpose of preparing better teachers, very much of the improvement in recent years in the method of teaching is due.

My own experience as a member of the school board in my home town brought to my mind most forcibly, when the question of the salaries of teachers was considered, the common practice of comparing the same with what was paid in other communities for like services. Unfortunately such a comparison rarely became broad enough to include the compensation paid to workers or public employees in other vocations. For the purpose of demonstrating the results of such a comparison I will here quote from the Nineteenth Annual Report of the Commissioner of Labor, showing the average weekly wages paid in 29 cities in that many States to what may be considered the commonest kind of labor in our country; that is, work upon the streets and sewers, together with the minimum yearly salaries of teachers in the elementary schools in such cities:

After examining this table, which clearly shows that the average wage paid to the commonest kind of labor is greater than that paid to well-qualified teachers, is it any wonder that since 1880, when the percentage of male teachers to the total number was 42.8 per cent, three years ago it had declined to 21.7 per cent, and probably at the present time is down to 20 per cent? When the average monthly salary of male teachers in the public schools of the United States amounts to only $58.60, and that for the women to $44.08, is it to be wondered at that other callings, in many kinds requiring far less ability, are having superior attractions for teachers?

As Members of this House and as the heads of families we well know that one of the first questions asked by the new Member on first coming to the city is as to the quality of the city schools. We are unwilling to bring our children from home schools enjoying a high reputation for efficiency to place them here unless we are quite sure that the same high standard is to be found. I am pleased to say in praise of the local schools that I have heard them highly commended; though in this connection an incident which has occurred within the past few days is worthy of consideration. I refer to the comments now being made in the papers in complaining of teachers who have been working in other lines outside of school hours, in order that they may increase the incomes which they are now receiving. This discussion has brought out considerable light upon the inadequacy of these salaries, and incidentally resulted in an order by the commissioners prohibiting the teachers from performing such outside work. I believe complaint is justly made that the District teachers are considerably underpaid for services rendered.

I am well aware of the fact that the past few years have witnessed some awakening in public sentiment to the injustice done to the half million teachers in this country. This improved sentiment has taken form in agitation for pensioning certain classes of teachers, for recognizing the longevity service, and in, perhaps, what may be termed the most radical advance, the enactment into law in various States of a minimum salary provision. Much has been written upon these subjects and many very valuable statistics have been compiled showing the results of such changes. There have been numerous instances of endowments of educational institutions by wealthy citizens, and in some instances these gifts have had a more direct bearing upon the compensation to be paid to teachers, notably in the provisions establishing pensions for them. The danger of this latter practice, however, has been on several occasions pointed out by teachers of acknowledged ability.

Mr. Chairman, it is because I deeply feel that this large class of workers is not being properly paid that I have asked the privilege of this House to lay some facts before it. No statistics embracing a cold array of figures can adequately reflect the true value of the services of those required from the very nature of their calling to be men and women of the highest character. They exercise a potent influence in molding public opinion in their community. Not only to them is committed the task of developing the mental qualities of our children, but often in their charge as many hours of daylight as in their father's and mother's, the moral training of these children is greatly influenced.

It has been the boast of our Nation that its schools are of the best, and surely there have never been at the head of any foreign institution of learning more illustrious teachers than we have produced. Within a decade the teachers sent out by our Government have revolutionized the educational systems of Porto Rico, the Philippines, and Hawaii. The same thorough and unselfish efforts which characterized their work here have been put into practice in those foreign lands. In the wake of that work have followed order and progress. In all bases of comparison by other countries I want to be able to point to the United States Government and say, "We pay the highest salaries to our teachers that are paid anywhere in the world." [Applause.]

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, let me say that I am aware that my appeal in behalf of the teachers comes rather late in the day, as practically all of the appropriation bills have been made up by the committees and acted upon by this House; but may I express the hope that the most generous and well-merited consideration will be given to the claims of this class of government employees in the next Congress.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. This is a very large item, $1,420,000, and its phraseology is rather peculiar. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee, or some one else who is able to inform me upon the point, as to what is meant by this language:

And for other educational and industrial purposes.

Mr. HINSHAW. What line?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Page 6, line 4.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would answer, Mr. Chairman, that enables the employment of industrial teachers. They might employ a blacksmith, or a carpenter, or some skilled person in some skilled trade, to teach the Indians at that trade.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Well, I observe in reading the bill practically all through it you have provided for the furnishing of a carpenter and a farmer and a blacksmith and things like that.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Those are treaty stipulations wherever you find them specifically mentioned in the bill.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is this appropriation intended to cover alll cases not covered specifically in the bill?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. So far as education is concerned, yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does it take into consideration any other kind of education than what is stated to be industrial education?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; academic as well.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the bureau require $1,420,000 to do that work?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman think it will require $1,420,000 to do that work next year?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I certainly think it will.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is it proposed to scatter this appropriation throughout the Indian agencies.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This is to pay for schools throughout the Indian country and upon the Indian reservations, the agency school and the day school and the small Indian schools everywhere.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is this new legislation here, or was a similar item contained in the former bill?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; this is an appropriation that has been made for years and years. There are about 200 schools supported out of this appropriation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I would like to ask whether or not these words are new, "and industrial?"

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Was that language contained in the last appropriation bill?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Was it the purpose of the committee in making this appropriation to widen the scope of this work over what it has been heretofore?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. The purpose of adding "and industrial" was to enlarge the education of the Indian to make him more fit to go out and make a living for himself—to make him a blacksmith, a carpenter, a painter, a wagon maker—and instruct him in all the manual training that was necessary for that purpose.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then, as you have enlarged the scope of the work, have the appropriations been correspondingly increased?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; there has not been any large increase in the appropriations. There is a general tendency, as the gentleman from Indiana well knows, throughout the country to enlarge the instruction in manual training.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I think that is correct.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And I am sure that the gentleman from Indiana will also agree with me that it is a step in the right direction.

Mr. COX of Indiana. We will agree upon that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And is a step which should be taken on behalf of no person who attends school more than on behalf of the Indian.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Now, is this same work that you intend to provide for in this paragraph provided in the other schools where you have submitted appropriations for in this bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, we have specific schools in which industrial training has long been provided for.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is this building up the appropriations in any way?

Mr. CAMPBELL. We have reduced the total sum of the appropriations this year.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Let me see if I can understand the gentleman. I want to get the information, and I am sure the gentleman is able to give it to me. Does the amount of money carried in this paragraph cover anything that is taught in the schools for which you have made specific appropriations in this bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] will permit, I think I can explain.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I want to answer a specific question. We make a total saving this year of $5,000 on the appropriation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The sum total, you mean?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; and yet we have, as is shown in this bill, enlarged the scope of education to include industrial work.

Mr. CARTER. I will ask the gentleman from Kansas if this is not the situation: That the money to be used for industrial purposes in boarding or nonreservation schools is specifically appropriated, and that this money is appropriated for a great class of day schools, not to be used in boarding schools, but to be used separately and aside from those schools for which specific appropriation has been made, and that the specific appropriations and these general appropriations do not conflict. Is not that correct?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is partially true. The fact is that it is the intention to enlarge it.

Mr. CARTER. In the day schools strictly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is not confined to the day schools.

Mr. MANN. It is not confined to schools at all, is it?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. Let us see. I will read:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, not otherwise provided for, and for other educational and industrial purposes——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN (continuing). So much money. That is not confined to schools at all.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the gentleman's construction?

Mr. MANN. You can run a blacksmith's shop under it, or you can start a factory under it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; but is not that an industrial education? We have blacksmith shops and carpenter shops at the Indian schools at Chillocco, and we have bakeries, laundries, dressmaking establishments, in all of these industrial schools.

Mr. MANN. Very well; but I say under this provision, so far as the provision is concerned, you can start a manufacturing plant that is in nowise connected with the schools for Indians.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But it is not the intention of the framers of this bill that that should be done, and we think that those who administer this appropriation will have altogether too much sense to start a factory.

Mr. MANN. There must be some good reason for putting in the words "and industrial," because if it means school that is covered by the language of the old law. "Educational purposes" covers a multitude of sins.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Educational purposes would hardly justify the construction of a blacksmith's shop or a carpenter shop, I think.

Mr. MANN. Not unless it was for educational purposes, it would not, but if you say "industrial purposes" it would permit the establishment of a blacksmith's shop, and not for education.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, that is not the purpose of this legislation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I would like to know if inserting the words "in connection therewith" after the word "purposes," in line 5, whether or not that would obviate the objection you urge against it?

Mr. MANN. I think it would. That would be perfectly plain. Then it would all be in connection with schools.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment and offer the following.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "purposes," in line 5, page 6, the words "in connection therewith."

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to know if all the industrial teachers which are to be employed are to be paid out of this appropriation.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Are they to be employed on the ground where the industrial training is to be had?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] that since he and I left school many of the teachers now must qualify themselves for teaching industrial work.

Mr. MADDEN. But that is not an answer to my question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And the teachers employed in these schools and the sum we have appropriated here will be required to teach industrial work.

Mr. MADDEN. Will they be required to be on the ground where the teaching is to be done?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The reason I asked that question is——

Mr. CAMPBELL. We are not establishing a correspondence school.

Mr. MADDEN. The reason I asked that question is that on a bill that was reported here some years ago, on inquiry it was discovered that they employed in Chicago a blacksmith to teach the Indians on the reservation.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We do not expect to teach blacksmithing by correspondence.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 5, after the word "purpose," insert "in connection therewith."

Mr. CAMPBELL. Speaking for some of the committee, I have no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not the floor at the present time.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill as to whether in the manual training given in the various lines if practical teachers are employed? That is, teachers who are practical in the particular branch they are expected to teach?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; they are required to know something of what they are called upon to teach.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. My question is not simply of their being required to know something of it, but as to whether or not they are skilled in the particular line they are expected to teach.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 6, page 6, add the following:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the purpose of educating the children of any Indian whose father is a taxpayer, citizen, and voter of any State or Territory in the United States."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I reserve the point of order upon that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think it is subject to the point of order, for the reason that it directs how the money shall be spent, and is a limitation upon the appropriation.

For many years, Mr. Chairman, it has been the policy of the Government to break up the Indian reservation by allotting their lands among the Indians for the purpose of making them citizens of the various States where they reside. We have accomplished that purpose to a great extent, and I presume that three-fourths of the Indians of the United States have their tribal lands allotted to each individual.

By the act of allotment they become citizens of the State where they live. Their children then following the citizenship of the parents become citizens of the State and subject to receive their due portion of the state school funds—that is, they receive from the State the same amount as the white children of the State are entitled to. This amendment provides that they must be taxpayers and citizens and voters of the State, and when they have had their lands allotted among them the Supreme Court of the United States has held that they are no longer wards of the Government, but are citizens of the State. Therefore there is no reason why the rest of the citizens of the United States should be taxed to keep up these Indian schools. It is a fact that we are paying $167 for each child educated in boarding schools. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs states that they go to the limit and pay $167 on each child in the Indian schools. This limit applies to boarding schools, nonreservation schools, and mission schools.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Under the paragraph as it now stands, what will be the gentleman's opinion as to whether or not any part of this $1,000,000 can be appropriated for the teaching of Indian children whose father is a taxpayer and, indeed, wealthy?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is a fact that there are hundreds of these children whose fathers are voters or holding offices under this Government, and whose children are entitled to be, and some of them are actually, sent to Carlisle, Hampton, or to any other Indian school that they desire to have them sent to in the United States.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman inform the House and tell us how many Indians in the United States are taxpayers?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I presume if this amendment was adopted and duly enforced that it would strike from the roll of the children now attending these Indian schools one-third of their present numbers and thus save an expense of one-third of the sum now spent by the Government.

Mr. HINSHAW. On these reservations which have recently been opened up, where allotments have been made but where nearly all the people living are Indians, does the gentleman know whether the States in which they are located have provided schools to which the children of these allotted Indians can go?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They certainly should have made that provision, if they have accepted the citizenship of these Indians, and permit them to vote, and require them to pay taxes. They are the wards of the Government until their lands are allotted to them; then they become citizens of the State and also entitled to attend the day schools of the State.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is it not true that in these well-settled Indian communities provision has not been made as yet for the children of Indians to go to the day schools provided by the States?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the Indians are citizens and voters and taxpayers of a State, why should the State not educate them, and why has it not been done?

Mr. HINSHAW. I am not asking why it has not been done, but if it has been done?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It has not been done in Texas. We have but one small Indian tribe in my State—the Alabama tribe—and they are not under the supervision of the United States Government, but attend our state schools, and the General Government has nothing whatever to do with them. The General Government has never assumed any control over this tribe. They are not wards of the Government.

Mr. FERRIS. Is not the gentleman aware that there is a provision in the enabling act which brought Oklahoma into the Union making each and every one of the Indians, irrespective of whether they be dependent or independent, free citizens of the State?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand that.

Mr. FERRIS. I take it the gentleman does not desire to strip dependent Indians of the benefit of schools. I think his amendment is more far-reaching than he intends, because the arbitrary provision in the enabling act makes our Indians citizens of Oklahoma, whether their disabilities have been removed or not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, I would accept an amendment that the dependent Indians, who have no control over their own property, should be excepted from this provision. Those Indians would be wards of the Government; but when they have a right to use and control their property, we are not called upon further to educate them, and I would at once take our hands off them and make the States assume the responsibility.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is entirely right on his latter proposition, but as I said before, there was incorporated into the enabling act bringing Oklahoma into the Union a positive provision making each and every Indian, whether independent or depedent, a citizen of the United States.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And a taxpayer?

Mr. FERRIS. It does not say that. Now, I should like to have this provision passed for the present, and ask the gentleman to do that until we can agree on an amendment that would not strip the dependent Indians of an education. This undigested amendment is far-reaching and dangerous.

Mr. CARTER. Let the amendment be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objetion, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask that this provision be passed for the present without prejudice.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I object, Mr. Chairman. I should like to dispose of this amendment at this time.

If this amendment should be adopted it will not touch the nonreservation schools. It does not by any means reach the schools suggested by the gentleman from Texas. It reaches the reservation schools and the day schools on Indian reservations and in States and counties where Indians hold allotments. It reaches and affects only that class of Indians who are most in need of this appropriation. For instance, take Indians who have their allotments, and who occupy practically all the land in a county, that land is not taxable, and there is no money for schools.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him? Under such circumstances they would be taxpayers.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I live in a State where a third of the Indians of the United States are at this time and a third of the Indian allotments. And there are a number of Indian reservations in Oklahoma, or, rather, counties where there are Indian allotments, where they have taken all the land and there are no schoolhouses. We have reservation schools, and this appropriation reaches that character of school. They are most in need of it for the reason that if you take this away from them we find it absolutely necessary to send them to the nonreservation schools.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me? Do these Indians pay a tax in these counties in your own State where almost the entire county is allotted?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. They pay taxes only on personal property. The allotment is nontaxable. They pay no taxes on real estate and could not afford schools and could not build schoolhouses. This affects every Indian who is a citizen, and every Indian in my State is a citizen.

Mr. HINSHAW. A citizen, a voter, and a taxpayer.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes; a citizen, a voter, and a taxpayer.

Mr. BYRNS. If the gentleman will allow me, this amendment provides that he must not only be a citizen and a taxpayer, but a voter. Does the gentleman think it is right for the National Government to appropriate money to educate the children of citizens who pay taxes in the various States?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I do in this particular instance. The large majority of the Indians in my State pay taxes on personal property, and it would affect every Indian who pays taxes, and that means 90 per cent of the Indians in my State.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Indians to whom he refers are members of the Five Civilized Tribes?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Not necessarily. A part of the Indians to whom I refer are members of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the appropriation now made by the United States for schools in the old Indian Territory?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I think $75,000 for the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It became necessary a few years ago, because of the conditions described by the gentleman from Oklahoma, to make special appropriations for the education of these Indians.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It was so thought by Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is that appropriation continued?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The original appropriation was $300,000, and the appropriation in this bill is $75,000. The last Congress passed a bill providing for the removal of restriction from 8,000,000 acres of land of the Five Civilized Tribes, and that land became taxable and they were able to build schoolhouses. In proportion as schoolhouses are increased in number we can reduce the appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does any of this particular appropriation go for the support of schools in the old Indian Territory?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The entire appropriation of $75,000 applies only to the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I mean the $1,420,000—are there any of the reservation Indian schools in the State of Oklahoma maintained out of that appropriation?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. There are reservation schools in Oklahoma maintained out of this appropriation, but none of the Five Civilized Tribes. There are a number of reservations in Oklahoma which are specifically appropriated for.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. And some are not specifically appropriated for.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word on this proposed amendment. I can not believe that the gentleman is serious in offering it. If the amendment were to prevail, it practically terminates right now the further education of the Indians, and why? It proposes to limit this appropriation so that no portion of it can be expended if the father of the child who is to attend the school happens to be a citizen, a voter, and a taxpayer of his State.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. All three must concur; he must be a citizen, a voter, and a taxpayer.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. A citizen, a taxpayer, and a voter. Now, let us see. Under the Dawes Act of 1887, providing for the allotment of lands to Indians, that law was construed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Heff case to this effect:

That any person who took an allotment under the provisions of that act became a citizen of the United States and subject to the laws of the State in which he might reside. Personally I have always had some doubt about whether it was the intention of Congress to provide that an Indian during such period would be a full citizen, but the Supreme Court has held that to be the law. This means that every Indian who took an allotment prior to May, 1906, is a citizen of the United States and a citizen of the State in which he may reside, and as a citizen of the State he becomes a voter. He is a taxpayer if he happens to possess any property that is subject to taxation. For instance, if an Indian having an allotment happens to acquire a little money, either by his own labor or by donation, and buys a horse or a cow or any considerable amount of live stock it is subject to taxation.

Consequently, if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] shall prevail, it would, in effect, as I see it, shut out every Indian allotted prior to May, 1906, at which time the law was enacted which withheld citizenship from an Indian allottee during the trust period. This provision, if it shall prevail, would, as I say, make it impossible to continue education among the blanket reservation Indians of the country that can not speak a word of English—Indians practically in their aboriginal state—who, because they happen to have taken an allotment, are citizens, taxpayers, and voters.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Suppose there were added this additional limitation: "And from whose lands the restrictions upon alienation have been removed;" would that correct the objection? Then he is not only a taxpayer, citizen, and voter, but his lands are taxable.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I believe it would be impracticable. I believe if there is a school maintained on an Indian reservation and there happens to be a man living in the vicinity of that school who has not a particle of Indian blood in him, if you please, that his children ought to be permitted to attend that reservation school, just as we are opening the schools of our State to the Indians of the State. We do not say if there are Indians residing in the locality where we erect a country school that the Indian can not patronize it.

Mr. CARTER. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Dakota what his specific construction is of the language used in the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to offer this as an amendment to my amendment, to modify it by adding to the end of it—and from whose land restrictions upon alienation have been removed.

[By unanimous consent, Mr. BURKE's time was extended for five minutes.]

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman speaks of Indians who pay taxes. I want to know if the gentleman from South Dakota knows of any ruling of the Supreme Court which defines what that means. Does that mean an Indian who pays taxes on his personal property or on his allotment?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Why, an Indian who is a taxpayer is an Indian, I suppose, who is subject to taxation. He may not actually pay any taxes, because he may not have anything that is taxable, but he is a taxpayer the moment he does become possessed of any taxable property, and that property may consist, as I have already stated, of a gold watch or a shotgun.

Mr. CARTER. That would mean any Indian off the reservation?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Anywhere, on or off the reservation, as in my State they collect personal property taxes from the Indians where they have property.

Mr. MANN. Not on the reservation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; on the reservations, if they happen to possess anything of any considerable value.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. In our State if an Indian has a dog he is a taxpayer—anything.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there not a statute under which the Secretary of the Interior, upon application, can remove the restrictions upon the right of alienation of an Indian, and that Indian becomes fully clothed with all rights of citizenship?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, is there any reason why an Indian, a citizen and voter, a payer of taxes, either personal or property, with the right to dispose of his real and personal property as he sees fit, should have his children educated at Government expense?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Except there remains the moral obligation of the Government to take care of these Indians whether they happen to be in the status of citizens or not, but the Government——

Mr. FITZGERALD. But if the gentleman carries his theory out, the Government will never cease to take care of them.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In the case which the gentleman cites, where restrictions might be removed because the man was regarded as entirely competent, his wife might be an illiterate Indian woman, unable to speak the English language, and his children, spending their time with their mother on the reservation, would be Indians very much more than they would be whites. Now, this father might not see fit to send his children away somewhere to school, which he would have to do if he was living upon the reservation—if he could not send his children to a reservation school—because there is no school there; and yet it is proposed to prevent these children from going into these reservation schools. I say it practically ends the education of our Indians, and the suggestions which have been made here by way of amendments are so impracticable that they could not be enforced. We would have to be having an inventory made of our Indians about every thirty or sixty days to find out who were eligible to come into the school and who were ineligible to stay there a month after they had entered. I say it is impracticable. This appropriation, Mr. Chairman, is for the maintenance of schools upon Indian reservations. Not one dollar of it can be expended upon a nonreservation school or any educational institution off of an Indian reservation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Are there any Indians with allotments on reservations who meet the description contained in the gentleman's amendment, who would have allotments on the reservations and who are citizens, voters, and no restriction upon the alienation of the allotment? Is there a single Indian in the United States who has an allotment on a reservation that meets this condition?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That has had the restrictions removed? Yes; there are some.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Where the allotment had been taken and the surplus land disposed of?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The land is within the reservation and they have a right to remain there and occupy it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask to change my amendment by adding at the end of it this language:

And from whose lands and trust funds restrictions upon alienation have been removed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the amendment the following:
"And from whose lands and trust funds restrictions upon alienation have been removed."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment may be considered as modified. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think there is a point of order that that is new legislation, and I would like to have a ruling upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds that it has been ruled, section 3942, volume 4, Hinds's Precedents, that—

While it is not in order to legislate as to qualifications of the recipients of an appropriation, the House may specify that no part of the appropriation shall go to recipients lacking certain qualifications.

A proviso offered to the agricultural appropriation bill provided:

That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the Agricultural College of Indiana, or any other State or Territory, until the Secretary of Agriculture shall be satisfied, and shall so certify to the Secretary of the Treasury, that no trustee, officer, instructor, or employee of said college is engaged in the practice of polygamy or polygamous relations, or is guilty of adultery or fornication.

Mr. Grosvenor of Ohio made the same point of order against the amendment that is made against this one, and the Chairman [Mr. PAYNE] overruled the point of order. The qualifications required of the recipients are not more in the nature of legislation in this case than they were in the case cited.

The pending amendment seems to be in the nature of a limitation upon the appropriation, which is permissible under scores of rulings, and the Chair is compelled to overrule the point of order.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I just want to drop this thought: When this amendment first came up I thought I would favor it, before this phase of the proposition was presented to me. The State and county has no authority to establish schools on an Indian reservation, and even though they had such authority, there would not be sufficient taxable values on a reservation for maintenance of state and county public schools, consequently the only schools on a reservation are Indian schools. Now, this provision prohibits the attendance at these Indian schools of pupils whose fathers are taxpayers, and on these reservations the tax-paying Indian may often live right along by the Indian who pays no taxes and is not a citizen of the United States. I think it is evident to this committee that if this amendment were adopted many children would thereby be deprived of the privilege of attending any school at all, because no state or county schools are near enough to be considered accessible, and by this amendment they would be prohibited from attendance in the Indian schools. There is absolutely no school for this Indian to attend. Simply because his father is a citizen of the United States and pays taxes he is excluded from any school privileges whatever. He is cut off from any educational privileges whatever, and for that reason I think the amendment of the gentleman from Texas should be rejected, and I shall vote in the negative.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I think the gentleman from Texas is dealing purely with an imaginary and not a real condition. The real condition this appropriation applies to is the maintenance of schools upon Indian reservations. This appropriation is not for schools where there is a general population of white people, or of Indians except in exceptional cases, who have complete title to their allotments. Because Indians have some personal property to be taxed is no reason why they should not have the benefit of reservation schools. It is not a case of the state school and the Indian reservation school being within reach of the same individual. It is the case of the reservation school accessible for that population or no school. Take the schools in my own State. There are no organized counties maintaining public schools within Indian reservations. If the children of Indians whose allotments have had restrictions removed are not to be permitted to obtain education in the Indian reservation schools, they will have no education within the reach of their homes at all.

Unless such allottees move off the reservation somewhere in the State where public schools are being maintained by the State, the Indian has no opportunity to educate his children in a school near his home. This condition applies to all Indian children who are in the Indian reservation, provided the parent may have reached that degree of intelligence where the Secretary of the Interior has removed the restriction of alienation from his allotment. I think, therefore, the gentleman would accomplish what he does not seek by any means to accomplish. This appropriation applies solely to Indian reservation schools, and the question is as to who can attend those schools. Under the particular amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas many Indian children would be deprived of any education anywhere near their homes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman let me suggest that if it does not apply to an Indian reservation school there can be no harm done?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It applies only to those schools, and that is all this appropriation reaches, and it is all the proposed amendment of the gentleman will reach.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that you have on these Indian reservations a great many schoolhouses?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. None except these reservation schools.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Do you believe these reservation schools will be burned up? Will not the State step in and run them in their own way?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The States will not step in and establish schools within Indian reservations. These are under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. When reservations are open, and counties can be organized, the States can step in, or municipalities, and establish a public-school system.

This appropriation you are seeking to place a limitation upon applies only to reservations, as I have said. The State has no authority to step in there and build schools.

Mr. BYRNS. In the event there should be on a reservation an Indian who is a citizen and who would be brought within this amendment, provided the amendment should pass, would or would not the Secretary of the Interior have the right to give his children permission to enter the school provided for in this amendment?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Why, this amendment would prevent that sort of thing. As it stands here now, that sort of a child could not get his education.

Mr. BYRNS. What I wanted to know is whether or not the Secretary of the Interior would have the right to permit children of such citizens to enter that school upon payment of tuition.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I rather think not. There is no law permitting it. These schools are not maintained for the purpose of receiving tuition. There is no provision made for it.

The Government should be liberal in according opportunities for education within reservations, as the States are outside of reservations. For an illustration, we have been opening up every year or two reservations. Take, for instance, Gregory County, adjoining the Rosebud Agency, or Tripp County. As soon as such portions of reservations are open to settlement the State builds its schoolhouses and maintains educational facilities for the Indian children and everybody else. Indian allotments are not subject to taxation for twenty-five years, unless restrictions against alienation are sooner removed under the intelligence qualification.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then this amendment does not apply, and the Indian would not be injured by the law at all?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I am merely illustrating where we have formed organized counties after reservations have been opened. The Indian children enter these schools and their educational facilities are furnished by the State. There are hundreds in this condition in the organized counties. You go a step farther into the Indian reservation and you get into a condition where the Government under this provision is maintaining the only schools there are, to wit, reservation schools.

Now, if one, two, three, or a dozen Indians in this reservation have reached a state of intelligence so that the Secretary of the Interior, short of the twenty-five-year period, may remove the restrictions on the alienation of land, this amendment, if it prevails, would shut out the opportunity of the children of those Indians from being educated in those schools. These cases are quite exceptional, though just as meritorious as the cases that come under the rule. These children in the reservation country under the system of schools maintained by the Government ought to be educated. These are the only educational facilities there, and until the State has its counties entirely organized this system will give vastly more education to the Indian children than can possibly be obtained in any other way by the same expenditure. The result of the amendment, if it passes, will work a great hardship, because it amounts to a denial of education. It would deprive these Indian children, in these exceptional cases, of the only opportunity of education within their reach.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Can these Indians living on the reservation have the restrictions on the sale of their lands removed?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. At any time after the allotments are made, upon a proper showing, under the present law, of sufficient intelligence and attainment in civilization on the part of the Indian allottee, the Secretary of the Interior may remove the restrictions.

Mr. MANN. Although he is still on the reservation?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

[Mr. UNDERWOOD addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, some days ago I introduced a resolution in this House which reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be required, if not incompatible with public interest, to inform the House of Representatives as to the present cost, in detail, of transmitting second-class mail matter by railroad transportation, and give approximate comparison of said cost with existing tariffs of express companies for similar railroad transportation service.

On the subject-matter of this resolution and on some matters pertinent thereto I want to submit some observations of an interrogatory nature which suggest themselves to me relative to the much talked of postal deficit.

In the message of the President to Congress he lays down the proposition that the deficit in the Post-Office Department is due to carrying second-class mail matter at 1 cent per pound, when it is costing the Government 9 cents per pound. This alleged discrepancy in income and expense is so striking that the whole country at once took it up for consideration, and the end is not yet.

Is 9 cents per pound for second-class mail carrying too much? Let us see.

By inquiry of express companies I ascertain some startling informaion in regard to express rates and mail-carrying rates. The President says it costs the Government 9 cents per pound to carry second-class mail matter. Second-class mail is principally newspapers, magazines, farm, industrial, scientific, and religious publications; indeed, all printed periodicals sent to subscribers by mail. In many instances this mail matter occupies one compartment of a car and express traffic the other. On the latter the tariff from Washington to Chicago, a distance of approximately 1,000 miles, is 2¼ cents per pound in 50 or more pound quantities. For shorter distances the price is about half as much, and for across-continent transportation about twice as much.

And so we see that in the longest haul possible express rates are not to exceed 6 cents per pound, while for long and short haul mail transportation the Government pays 9 cents—a reasonable estimate of one-half to two-thirds more than express tariffs. Both the express companies and the Post-Office Department furnish men to put the freight in the cars, accompany it in transit, take it from the cars and deliver it, and why this glaring difference in cost? Are express companies doing a losing business? Hardly. Do you not remember how one of them recently "cut a melon" at Christmas time for its stockholders and distributed seventeen millions in profits? And if the express companies make large profits at the rates they charge, are the railroad companies dealing fairly with the Government in charging two or three times as much for carrying mail as they charge for express shipments?

In addition to this I am informed by a member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads [Mr. Cox] that the Government is paying the railroads a rental of $3,000 each per year for the use of postal cars which cost the railroads less than $7,000 each as original investment.

Can anybody see any evidence of loose business methods in the Post-Office Department paying the railroads such extravagant prices as these for transporting the mails?

Manifestly there is something wrong with the Government's contracts with the railroads. The Government mail rate for carrying newspapers is 1 cent a pound. The express rate is one-half cent. Some of the railroads, where they carry newspaper packages direct without the intervention of the enormously prosperous express companies, are glad to do it for one-fourth cent a pound. Traction companies carry them for half a cent. Why should it cost the Government 9 cents?

But they say magazines are a longer haul and to this class of mail matter the deficit is largely due. I am not caring how much postage the Government charges for advertising matter, and some scale of postal prices which will charge the advertiser profitable rates for transporting his bids for trade would meet my hearty approval. On the other hand, the proposed increase of postage on reading matter ought to be protested as a violation of the fundamental principle of promoting general intelligence. This educational side of the question is as old as our Government, and it has been admitted by all the educators of all the generations since the days of Jefferson that he was right when he said:

> The way to prevent these irregular interpositions of the people (he referred to the governmental abuses of Europe) is to give them full information of these affairs through the channels of the public papers, and so contrive that these papers shall penetrate the whole mass of the people. The basis of our Government being the opinion of the people, the very first object should be to keep that right, and were it left to me to decide whether we should be a government without newspapers or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter. By that I should mean that every man should receive those papers and be capable of reading them.

Will increasing postage rates on newspapers and magazines conduce to the same reading-matter facilities that we now have and that have brought the privilege of securing knowledge within the means of the poor as well as the rich? Why, sirs, a more important question than merely profit should concern us in this matter. The postal authorities and the President's message set forth figures to show that the Post-Office Department does not pay. Does the War Department pay? Does the Navy Department pay? Do other departments pay? Of course they do not pay in tangible return of dollars and cents, and neither does the Post-Office Department pay. But it does something that other departments can not do. It furnishes an inexpensive service for prompt and safe communication of both pleasure and profit. It furnishes facilities for disseminating newspapers and magazines within the means of laboring men and farmers for enlightenment of their families, and it thereby furnishes convenience and intelligence to a great majority of people who pay most of the government taxes and receive few direct benefits except United States mail and a small package of garden seeds occasionally.

Another thing: If second-class postal rates are raised, the express companies, and not the Post-Office Department, will profit by the change. Already large quantities of magazines and other publications are sent out by express and distributed from news stands and by carrier boys. Do you not see how, if we raise postage rates, the express companies will get the business that the Post-Office Department ought to have, and could have, if it would get the same carrying rates from the railroads that express companies do? Of course you do, and so will anyone who will give the question intelligent consideration.

And then, too, under present methods, the mails are weighed on the railroads at stated periods—every four years. The railroads know just when this will occur, and if they were disposed to do so could "pad" the amount of mail by arranging with their friends, such as mail-order houses, and so forth, to put millions of catalogues and circulars into circulation at mail-weighing time. I do not say this is done. But I do say that it could be done easily and without violation of law.

Far better would it be—surer to the Government that it pays for what it gets, and safer to the railroads that claim that they must charge high postal rates to protect them against possible increase in tonnage in four-year contracts—to have government mail weighers at work all the time, and, like bank examiners and post-office inspectors, drop in unannounced and weigh mails at unexpected times as a basis of calculation for future contracts. In this way there could be no such possibility as "padded" mails at weighing time unless dishonest postal officials would furnish "tips" as to mail-weighing times.

These suggestions are offered as interrogatories rather than implied charges, and I believe them to be of importance and worthy of our earnest investigation.

Another evidence of lack of consistent management of postal affairs is manifest in the mercantile pursuit of the Government in the envelope-selling business. I hold here in my hand, and submit it for consideration of the House, an advertisement issued by the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, which announces that the Government will sell envelopes "about 8 for a cent, stamp value extra," and "in quantities of 500 and upward no charge for printing." It is a package of advertising matter sent out to drum up envelope trade, but it happened to be addressed to a well-known Indiana printer, and he forwarded it to me. Look at this big circular, printed in six colors at government expense to attract trade, and sent out through the mails at second-class postage cost. Besides, here is a sample of a price list and order blank folder, which the Third Assistant asks business men to "hang up for ready reference." All this in the classic language of a top-notch ad writer and colored like a circus bill.

By careful reading of this advertisement, which, I presume, is circulated through the mails at a cost of 9 cents per pound to the Government, as are also the envelopes sold, I see that first-quality envelopes, with name and address printed on, are quoted at 62 cents per 500, plus stamp value; and second quality, printed as above, at 56 cents per 500, plus stamp value. I submit that every printer in this country will bear me out in the honest declaration that it is worse than "scab" prices to make ready and print envelopes in quantities of 500 for 56 cents, as the Government does, to say nothing of the cost of the stock. Of course the Government may be able to do this at a profit on contract which enables envelope makers to furnish immense quantities at factory prices, which printers can not get, and by use of special and very expensive machinery. But the printers of the country can not do it and live, now that butchers are no longer giving away liver and soup bones and there is a Payne tariff on about everything from prunes to pudding.

The envelopes cost the Government, according to official figures, about 79 cents per thousand. The Government sells a 6¾-inch envelope, the popular size, delivered to any part of the United States, at $1.24 per thousand. The Postmaster-General, in his 1909 report, claims that it costs over 9 cents per pound to deliver second-class mail matter. Second-class mail matter obtains the lowest rate of postage. It is therefore safe to assume that it costs the same to deliver these envelopes as it does for second-class mail matter. The envelopes weigh, approximately, 7½ pounds to the thousand, which would make the cost of transportation at least 67 cents, according to the Postmaster-General. Adding that to the cost of the envelope would make $1.46 per thousand, and deducting the price the Government obtains, $1.24 per thousand, would leave a difference of 22 cents per thousand, or a loss of 22 cents per thousand on each 1,000 envelopes distributed. In addition to this first loss is the cost of clerical work to handle this entire business. Does the ordinary individual who takes his pencil in hand and figures for a few moments believe that this generosity on the part of the Post-Office Department does not add to the deficit of $17,000,000 per year, as per the Postmaster-General's report?

Look at this schedule of prices:

One stamped envelope at 3 cents, or $10 per thousand for the envelopes.
Two stamped envelopes at 5 cents, or $5 per thousand for the envelopes.
Three stamped envelopes at 7 cents, or $3.33⅓ per thousand for the envelopes.
Five stamped envelopes at 11 cents, or $2 per thousand for the envelopes.
Eight stamped envelopes at 17 cents, or $1.25 per thousand for the envelopes.
Twenty-five stamped envelopes at 54 cents, or $1.50 per thousand for the envelopes.
Fifty envelopes, stamped, at $1.07, or $1.40 per thousand for the envelopes.
Five hundred envelopes, stamped, at $10.56, or $1.12 per thousand for the envelopes.

This refers to the No. 6¾, or the popular business envelope, which costs the Post-Office Department 79 cents.

We will not attempt to explain why the department sells 8 envelopes at a lower price per thousand than they do 25 or 50. That is one of their business (?) secrets. But a glance at the above figures will show where the real profit comes in on the stamped envelopes, and if one will stop to think of the class of people who purchase stamped envelopes, either plain or with the blank return request, in lots of from 1 to 50, he will have covered a vast majority of the "patrons of the Dead-Letter Office." The mechanics, laborers, and farmers, the purchasers of small quantities, are the ones who are paying the Post-Office Department as high as 1,000 per cent profit on the stamped envelopes, and it is the big concerns, which are well able to pay for their printing, for which the Government is printing envelopes free of cost and selling them at an absolute loss to the department.

Is the Post-Office Department considerate of industrial welfare when it enters into competition with the great army of deserving printers and sells envelopes at jobbers' prices, printed free of charge, for the benefit of business men using large quantities of envelopes and who can pay cash in advance or cash on delivery for them? Possibly the Government has a right to make envelopes and sell them, but it has no right to cut prices so as to cripple live and let live printers' earnings. If it wants to print and sell envelopes let it get out of the cut-price business that robs the printers—who are necessary in every city and town—of legitimate fruits of their labor.

Furthermore, if the Government is right in its cut-price printing industry, in which it gets factory prices on million and billion quantities, why not enter all lines of manufacturing business and assume government ownership and control of everything from the field to the bank? It might possibly make a profit (?) in this, as it thinks it does at the envelope-printing business, but it would kill enterprise and industrial thrift as dead as the mummies of ancient Egypt.

One more citation of something lacking in postal management and I am done. In the postal service are three classes of employees, whose duties are somewhat familiar to all of us. They are the postal clerks on railways, city mail carriers, and rural mail carriers. The postal clerks are away from home part of the time, and thereby have an extra expense for living cost, and rural carriers must furnish their own horses and vehicles and the keep of them. Otherwise they must all be men of such intellectual and physical qualifications as to pass civil-service regulations.

The wages paid these men who actually handle the mail, compared with those of the political favorites higher up, are indicative that the politicians are being well cared for. The average annual salaries of mail clerks, city carriers, and rural-delivery carriers are $1,169, $1,076.68, and $867, respectively, while those of their immediate superiors in the service are two and three times as much—enough more, at all events, to indicate lack of financial system; and if this prevails in all branches of the department as in the citations here and heretofore given, it is evidence that there ought to be a practical business man in charge of the post-office branch of the Government, rather than a professional politician, as is usually the condition when a national political chairman is made Postmaster-General.

For instance, it is currently reported that in Canada, where the government does not play politics in government service, in spite of great distances and sparse population, second-class postage has just been reduced to one-fourth the rate now charged by the United States.

The President is to be commended in any stand he takes for economy in the public service, but his suggestion of reducing the postal deficit by increasing postage and overlooking the extravagant mail-carrying contracts with the railways is the kind of administration in favor of special interests and against the masses that has already gone too far.

I repeat that the postal service is the greatest blessing to the people at large the Government bestows. I also admit that there may be, here and there, an instance of imposition on the Government by some publisher or merchant sending commercial adjuncts through the mails at second-class rates that should be rated higher. But any effort to increase the postal expenses of the millions, in order that the unnecessary high rates for transporting the mails may be continued, will be almost universally condemned, and so it should be.

The country is entitled to the present mail facilities. Reasonable postage and free mail delivery have done more to bring the farmer and the laboring man into deserved touch with intellectual and commercial progress than any public facility ever given to them. Reasonable rates have also given opportunity to millions, who could not otherwise afford to do so, to supply themselves and their families with newspapers and magazines that contribute largely to our universal education and our marvelous progress. If there is a living man who uses the mails who is clamoring for higher postal rates or a curtailed postal service, I never heard of him. But I have heard of an army of people who demand continuation of first-class mail service with no increase in rates.

Therefore, if it is not possible to have our mail transported, in justice to all concerned, on a self-supporting basis, which I believe could be done with judicious management, we can easily reduce appropriations for other and less important departments of government, so our mail service shall not suffer diminished efficiency, nor the people or their public treasury increased expenses.

Less political debt paying and more business sagacity in the management of our postal affairs might be a redress for deficits, which the administration could adopt with much profit to the Government, to the service, and to the public. And, mark the prediction, political debt paying is one of the evils besetting public affairs which a discriminating public will sooner or later abolish for all time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 42.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I desire to make a motion that the committee do now rise.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to have this amendment offered before the committee rises.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Indians," in line 8, page 6, insert: "including those in the Territory of Alaska."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 19038, the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent reference of the bill (H. R. 4620) authorizing the Omaha tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims was changed from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By unanimous consent, reference of the bill (H. R. 20834) authorizing the Otoe and Missouria and the Omaha tribes of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims was changed from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

CRIMINAL DEPORTATION BILL.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority may have one week in which to file views on House bill 20980.

Mr. MANN. What is the bill?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The criminal deportation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 371), which was referred to the Committee on Claims and, with accompanying papers, ordered printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State relative to the claim of the G. R. Caswell Lumber Company, an American concern, of Vermont, and Mr. W. K. Baldwin, a resident of Quebec, for losses sustained by reason of a fire which, started in June, 1907, for legitimate purposes by surveying party in the employ of the International Boundary Commission while engaged in placing monuments along the boundary between the State of Vermont and the Province of Quebec, got beyond control and burned over an area of one hundred and forty-five acres in Vermont and Quebec.

It will be seen from the report that the claim of the Caswell Lumber Company amounts to $312.30 and that of Mr. Baldwin to $125, the amount of both claims being $437.30; that it was agreed between the Canadian government and the Department of State to recommend that the owners of the burned-over district be compensated as a matter of equity, the total amount to be borne equally by the United States and Canada, and that the government of Canada has already paid its one-half, out of which Mr. Baldwin's claim of $125 has been satisfied.

In accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State, the Congress is requested, as a matter of justice and equity, to appropriate the sum of $218.65, to be placed at the disposal of the Secretary of State in order that it may be added to the balance of $93.65 paid by the government of Canada and a full settlement of the claim of the Caswell Lumber Company reached.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 18, 1910.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 19, 1910.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 19255) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, with sundry Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I ask unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. There are a number of items in it that ought to go to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent that the House do now consider the Senate amendments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Are they printed?

The SPEAKER. They were ordered to be printed.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. There is no objection to the bill being referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. It would go to the committee, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution and bill of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 111. Joint resolution to donate a brass cannon to the State of Georgia; and

H. R. 13145. An act for the relief of John W. Dula and C. M. Cox.

HOUSE BILL WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, House bill 19255, consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 19028) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last evening the pending question was the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], against which a point of order was raised by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. MANN. May we have the amendment reported?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I simply reserved the point of order, and will listen to what the gentleman has to say. Then, perhaps, I will not make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the paragraph will be reported, and the amendment, so that the committee may understand it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians, $70,000.

Amend by inserting after "Indians," in line 8, the words "including those in the Territory of Alaska."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the conditions in Alaska are such that it is deemed highly desirable that some fund be available for the enforcement of the law in that Territory against the sale of intoxicating liquors to Indians there.

Under the provisions of an act passed in the second session of the Sixtieth Congress, it is made a penal offense for any person to sell intoxicating liquors to Indians in Alaska. Section 9 of the act of February 6, 1909, provides:

That section 142 of said act of March 3, 1899, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 142. That if any person shall, without the authority of the United States or some authorized officer thereof, sell, barter, or give to any Indian or half-breed who lives or associates with Indians, any spirituous, malt, or vinous liquor, or intoxicating extract, such person shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500, or be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a term not to exceed two years."

At the Lake Mohonk conference of the friends of the Indians held in October, 1909, Mr. Brown, Commissioner of Education of the United States, made an address upon conditions in Alaska, in the course of which he spoke as follows:

Still further, there is need of legal restraints, particularly as regards the sale of intoxicants. On the side of legal provisions two important acts were passed by the Congress at its session last winter. One of these makes the sale of alcoholic liquors to the Alaskan natives a felony; the other provides for the appointment of members of the Alaska school service as special peace officers, with power, under the direction of the Department of Justice, to make arrests in case of wrongdoing either by natives or against natives.

He then goes on to tell that some attempts are being made to prevent the sale of intoxicants to the natives in Alaska. It appears, Mr. Chairman, that the abuse is most prevalent in those parts of Alaska where the Indians find employment among the white settlers. Away from the settlements there is no danger of liquor being sold to the Indians.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. Was last year's appropriation available to Alaska?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Unfortunately, it is not; although provision is made for Indian police for the purpose. The act for the present fiscal year does not contain the words which I have offered as an amendment to this bill; but it seems to me that if it be desirable to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors to Indians in the United States, much greater reason exists to enforce the law regarding prohibition against such sales to the Indians in Alaska. I hope the chairman of the committee will not object to the amendment. It can do no harm, and this power should not be taken away from the bureau at this time.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, while we are in sympathy with the amendment suggested by the gentleman, the committee considered that it would not be wise to extend the jurisdiction of Indian affairs in the Territory of Alaska. The Alaskan natives are not Indians in the strict sense. The Indian Office did not desire this legislation and did not care to assume the responsibility of expending any of this money in the Territory of Alaska. There is no demand, so far as this committee knows, for this legislation or this appropriation to be extended to Alaska, and if there is it should come in some other appropriation. We do not wish to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Indian Office to such an extent that it may send agents to Alaska and other remote places, as, for instance, Hawaii or Porto Rico, and therefore we limited purposely this appropriation to apply to the suppression of the sale of liquor among the Indians in the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it not a fact that the Bureau of Indian Affairs has had this authority for a number of years?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, there is something in one or more of the appropriation acts having some reference to the suppression of the sale of intoxicating liquors in Alaska, but our understanding is that there was no money expended and nothing done under that authority or appropriation by the Indian Bureau.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What other department or bureau could have expended this money?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Our understanding is that there was no money expended in Alaska from those appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My understanding is different from that of the gentleman, because I recall very well a number of addresses made by the late Rev. Sheldon Jackson, who was a pioneer missionary in Alaska, and at whose instance, as I recall, the appropriation was first made, and some efforts have been made at various times to prevent the sale of intoxicants there by the bureau. It came in connection with other work that was designed to assist these Indians, the creation of reindeer herds, the segregation of the herds to different places where the Alaskan Indians could be placed as apprentices, and in connection with certain efforts to organize schools there among them.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that I have nothing to say against the merits of the legislation the gentleman is now talking about; but the point I am making is that it is not a proper subject for the Committee on Indian Affairs to deal with.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is just as proper a subject for the committee to deal with as it is to deal with the sale of intoxicating liquors among the Indians in the United States. If the gentleman will examine the statute, and the power of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, he will find that there is no doubt about that.

Mr. GOULDEN. How many Indians are there in Alaska?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not know that there are any.

Mr. GOULDEN. Has the gentleman any idea?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; I have not.

Mr. GOULDEN. How much money was appropriated last year for this item?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think it was $50,000, as I remember it.

Mr. GOULDEN. What were the estimates this year made by the Indian Bureau?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Seventy thousand dollars.

Mr. GOULDEN. Fifty thousand dollars, I beg the gentleman's pardon; as it appears in the original estimate it was $50,000 for 1911.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman said $40,000, but it was $50,000, and there was a supplemental estimate of $20,000.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman tell us why the committee saw fit to increase the amount from $50,000 to $70,000, and for what specific purpose, as he claims, was this money to be used?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will permit me to correct him, my recollection is the appropriation for the last fiscal year was $40,000.

Mr. MANN. No; $50,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The appropriation for the last fiscal year was $40,000; for the present fiscal year it is $50,000, and the estimates for the next year amount to $70,000, and that amount is proposed in this bill.

Mr. GOULDEN. My authority for stating it was only $50,000 was a gentleman on this side, a member of your committee [Mr. STEPHENS], who said it was $50,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am certain I am correct in what I stated.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman tell us just how that money is to be used? What is its specific purpose? Is it under the control of the state police, a special police force, or the regular Indian police force?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, it is first under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, of course, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. Then there is a person who is at the head of this work, and there are certain special agents employed in connection with the suppression of the liquor traffic; they utilize the employees generally in the Indian Service, and particularly the Indian police.

Mr. GOULDEN. If the gentleman will permit another question. Of course he is aware that several of the States where the largest Indian reservations are and where most Indians are found are prohibition States, which would indicate you did not require so much of a force to guard against liquor being taken into the reservations and distributed amongst the Indians.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman from New York has had any experience with the practical work in a number of prohibition States he must know that it requires a very large force to suppress the traffic in intoxicating liquors.

Mr. GOULDEN. How would that be possible if liquor could not go into those States legally? I have in mind now Kansas; North Dakota, which, I believe, is prohibition; and Oklahoma, which I know is a prohibition State.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, the people who reside in those States do not possess as high a regard for obeying the law as does my distinguished friend from New York.

Mr. MANN. You do not mean people residing within those States, but people coming into those States from New York to sell liquor to Indians.

Mr. GOULDEN. It is more probable people coming from Chicago, which is much nearer than New York.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The whisky is sent from Illinois, New York, Kentucky, Tennessee, and from other States to be sold by men who are willing to take the chances of violating the law.

Mr. GOULDEN. Does that same thing apply to the gentleman's own State of Kansas?

Mr. CAMPBELL. We do not manufacture it there.

Mr. GOULDEN. Then you are better off than some other States.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Men who want to violate the law by selling liquor buy it in the other States and bring it in among the Indians.

Mr. GOULDEN. Then the people in Kansas seem to be better off than they are in Oklahoma, though I doubt the ability of any State to stop the drinking of liquor entirely.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I was about to say, some of this money to suppress the sale and introduction of liquor into the Indian country is expended some distance from the Indian country, as, for instance, where the shipment originates, and it is possible that some portion of it may have been expended as far away from the Indian country as the great city in which my distinguished friend resides.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he has a record of prosecutions carried on under this provision during the last year?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes, sir. There were last year 1,091 arrests and 546 convictions.

Mr. FERRIS. In what States did those occur?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In most of the States having Indian population—about 15 different States. I can give the gentleman a list of the States if he desires.

Mr. FERRIS. I would like to have it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. California, Arizona, Wisconsin, Iowa——

Mr. FERRIS. Do you have the number of arrests and convictions in each State?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In California there were 223 arrests, 163 convictions; Arizona, 212 arrests, 173 convictions; Wisconsin, 134 arrests, 7 convictions; Iowa, 107 arrests, 21 convictions; Oklahoma, 107 arrests, 49 convictions; Montana, 57 arrests and 21 convictions; Idaho, 51 arrests, 20 convictions; New Mexico, 33 arrests, 12 convictions; Nevada, 29 arrests, 13 convictions; Nebraska, 29 arrests, 23 convictions; Utah, 26 arrests, 14 convictions; Washington, 23 arrests, 13 convictions; New York, 22 arrests, 3 convictions; South Dakota, 16 arrests, 4 convictions; Wyoming, 16 arrests, 4 convictions; North Dakota, 5 arrests, no convictions. I may say that is a prohibition State. Oregon had 7 arrests and 4 convictions; Colorado, 2 arrests, 1 conviction; Illinois, 2 arrests and 1 conviction.

Mr. FERRIS. Now, if the gentleman will yield just a minute further.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I ask that my time be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. What was the amount appropriated last year for this same item?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The appropriation that was expended in the arrests and convictions I have enumerated was $40,000. That was for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909. The appropriation this year is $50,000.

Mr. FERRIS. The item says it is $70,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The appropriation for this present fiscal year is $50,000.

Mr. FERRIS. Why do you anticipate a greater trouble along this line next year than during this fiscal year? Why do you increase the appropriation from $50,000 to $70,000?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. For the reason that the work of suppressing the sale of liquors among Indians has became very much more extensive than heretofore, and it has brought such good results that it was thought that more money could be expended with better results.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How about the point of order?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will not make a point of order, but I hope the amendment will not prevail. I simply ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I renew the point of order if the gentleman from South Dakota withdraws it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What is the point of order?

Mr. MANN. The point of order is that there is no authority of law for this appropriation so far as Alaska is concerned. There is an authority of law for appropriation so far as the Indian country is concerned, however.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think there is authority. I refer to two sections of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

SEC. 463. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and agreeably to such regulations as the President may prescribe, have the management of all Indian affairs and of all matters deriving out of Indian relations.

SEC. 467. The Secretary of the Interior shall adopt such rules as may be necessary to prohibit the sale of arms or ammunition within any district or country occupied by uncivilized or hostile Indians, and shall enforce the same.

Now, if Alaska be not a district or country, I do not know exactly what it is. In addition to that the statute of 1909, which I have sent to the desk, specifically prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors to Indians in Alaska, and the enforcement of such laws is placed by the Revised Statutes in the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the provision for the care of the natives or Indians in Alaska have been carried in the sundry civil bill or some other appropriation bill, and they never have been carried in the Indian appropriation bill. The Indian Bureau, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Minnesota, says, has never exercised jurisdiction over the Indians of Alaska. I do not believe that the natives of Alaska are classed as Indians at all. I suppose that is the ground on which they are put under the control of the Commissioner of Education, so far as they are under the control of any government official of Washington; and the appropriations for the Commissioner of Education do not come under the Indian appropriation bill. We make appropriations and have made appropriations for the education of these people, for the care of natives of Alaska, to the Commissioner of Education through the sundry civil appropriation bill, and I do not think that the item is in order in this bill with reference to any appropriation relating to the natives of Alaska.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him, and ask him on this point, Does not the gentleman believe that the sections of the Revised Statutes read by the gentleman from New York cover all the Indians in all parts of the United States, and does he not believe that the Territory of Alaska is as much covered as the Territory of New Mexico and Arizona? Therefore it covers the whole question of the sale of liquors, and that we have the same right to prohibit the sale of liquors in Alaska, if it is represented by a Delegate, as we have in Arizona and New Mexico; and I think that the Indians are protected by the sections already read in the hearing of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas is, that if the provisions of the Revised Statutes read by the gentleman from New York have any application to this case, then the amendment of the gentleman from New York is entirely superfluous. Of course that is not a matter for the Chair to consider in deciding the point of order.

The fact that the gentleman from New York offers an amendment including Alaska shows that in the mind of the gentleman from New York this provision of the Revised Statutes does not apply to Alaska; because, if these provisions did apply to Alaska, then the amendment would be superfluous and the provisions prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors among Indians would be sufficient.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In addition to that, I may say that Doctor Duncan, who had charge as agent of the Methecatla Indians in Alaska, when he was before the committee some years ago, stated that there had been numerous prosecutions for the sale of whisky to the Indians under his charge, and they were disposed of under the laws of the United States in force in Alaska. Therefore the federal courts of Alaska now have the jurisdiction and can prosecute the violators of the law in relation to the sale of intoxicating liquors to these Indians. If so, why is it necessary to add this amendment? I think, therefore, that the amendment is useless.

Mr. MANN. Why, of course, so far as I can recall, the Indian Bureau has never had anything to do with these Indians in Alaska, if they can be called "Indians." They are called "natives" of Alaska. But I undertake to say that when the gentleman from New York offers an amendment which seeks to interpret the provisions of this act as not applying to the Indians of Alaska, he thereby interprets the provisions of the Revised Statutes as not applying to the Indians of Alaska, if they be Indians. If they apply, then the terms of the act for the suppression of intoxicating liquors among Indians is sufficient and the gentleman's amendment superfluous. If the gentleman's amendment is new legislation, it is out of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. MANN. I always yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not my interpretation, but sometimes it is necessary to enact superfluous legislation to get into the head of those in charge of the present administration that these things must be done.

Mr. MANN. I suspect the gentleman's suggestion may be true as to other administrations, but I think it is not the fact as to the present administration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The present or recent administration. I will state to the gentleman that, if it will help, I will include the recent administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman whether there is anything for residents of Alaska included in this bill?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The only reference in this bill to Alaskan Indians is in an item for transportation of children to Indian schools, which contains the words, as I recall them, "and Indian pupils from Alaska." That is the only reference to Alaska that there is in the bill, and I understand that was put in because a very few native children from Alaska have been educated in some of the Indian schools in this country.

Mr. MANN. Is that in the existing law?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In lines 22 and 23 of the page under consideration, page 6, there is a reference to Alaska.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from South Dakota whether the Indian Bureau has charge of the natives of Alaska or not?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It has not. It does not claim to have any jurisdiction whatever over the natives of Alaska. My recollection has been refreshed, and the reference to children from Alaska, in the existing law, and perhaps in this bill, is to "native" children from Alaska, and not "Indian" children.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The paragraph referred to appears to be in lines 22 and 23 on page 6, the page under consideration.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say further, answering the question of the Chair, that the Indian Bureau has never exercised any control or jurisdiction whatever over the natives of Alaska. The only control exercised by the Government over the natives of Alaska thus far has been in reference to their education, and the appropriations for that purpose have always been carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill. In the current law, on page 50, under the head of "Education in Alaska," appears the following:

Education in Alaska: To enable the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion and under his direction, to provide for the education and support of the Eskimos, Aleuts, Indians, and other natives of Alaska.

Then it goes on and describes the construction of buildings, and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in the sundry civil appropriation bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is in the sundry civil appropriation bill, and the Indian Bureau has never exercised any control over the natives of Alaska.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The statement that the Indian Bureau has never exercised any control over the natives of Alaska does not change the fact that it is competent for the House, in the Indian appropriation bill, to make appropriations to enable it to carry out powers conferred upon it by statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The statute to which the Chair has been referred by the gentleman from New York, section 462 of the Revised Statutes, providing for a Commissioner of Indian Affairs, was passed in 1832, long before we had Alaska. That would make no difference if Alaskans were Indians within the meaning of that act. But all the laws relating to the Indian Bureau and the Indian Department; as, for instance, section 2046 of the Revised Statutes, seem to relate to what we commonly call Indians within the United States. The President is authorized by that section to appoint from time to time superintendents of Indian affairs. Then the statute enumerates the States and Territories within which they may be appointed. Alaska is not mentioned. The Chair does not find that Alaska is mentioned in any of the acts, early or late, relating to the Indian Service, or to the creation of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The Chair does not find that they have ever been appropriated for in bills coming from the Indian Affairs Committee, but always in bills coming from the Committee on Appropriations, such as the sundry civil bill. There is in that bill, as passed last year, provision for the education of Alaskans, a provision for the purchase of reindeer for natives of Alaska, for the instruction of Alaskan natives in the care and management of reindeer, and so forth. All the provisions of law relating to Alaska and governing the natives of Alaska are found in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is a statute which disposes of the revenue of Alaska derived from liquor licenses, and a certain percentage of that revenue is devoted to the enforcement of the liquor laws of the district of Alaska, entirely independent of any appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] refers the Chair further to an act of Congress providing for the government of Alaska, in which it is declared that for the purposes of that act the natives of Alaska shall be considered Indians.

That is to say, they are statutory Indians for the purpose of that act only. The Chair is of the opinion that the statute upon the subject of the Indian Bureau and controlling the Indian affairs, and the rule requiring certain matters to be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, all have reference to the Indians of the United States and not to the natives of Alaska, which by statute have been declared to be Indians for the purposes of that particular act. The Chair thinks the amendment is not germane, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 6, line 8, after the word "dollars," by inserting:
"To enable the President to relieve distress among the Indians and provide for their care and for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases, including the purchase of vaccine and the expense of vaccination, $20,000."

Mr. MANN. I will reserve a point of order on that amendment; that is a new proposition. I wish, before the gentleman disposes of that, to allow me to make a request for unanimous consent. The gentleman from South Dakota knows that this appropriation bill is made up in an unusual arrangement, which, I suppose, is partly due to suggestions by the department. We have just passed certain items in relation to irrigation, and we might very properly put in after the item providing for water the item to prevent the use of whisky.

Mr. TAWNEY. Why should not the water and whisky go together?

Mr. MANN. They should; but here in this arrangement, after providing the water they introduce a school before they permit the water to be mixed with the whisky, and this item in reference to the suppression of intoxicating liquor comes in between the item for Indian day schools and an item for the construction of school buildings. It would be far more proper, instead of placing the item concerning whisky among the items containing schools and for the education of children, to place it after the item that provides the water. Will not the gentleman consent to put the item in ahead of the last preceding item?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My friend from Illinois heretofore has criticised the form of the bill for the order in which the items appear.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. I have not criticised the arrangement of the bill at all.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This item follows the law and the statute and was put in just as it was in the law of last year.

Mr. MANN. That would be all right if the gentleman were not mistaken; but he is mistaken.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to have my friend state where he would place the item.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about the order of the items in the bill; they are not in the same order as last year at all. No bill has ever had an item of this kind in among educational items before. I would put it ahead of the last preceding item, just ahead of line 3, before you commence with the educational items.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, with the understanding that the amendment I have just offered shall follow this paragraph found in lines 7 and 8, I have no objection to the transfer suggested by the gentleman from Illinois; it is entirely unimportant. Let the paragraph, lines 7 and 8, precede line 3, if it will please the gentleman better; and let it be followed by the amendment I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that that arrangement may be agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What difference does it make about the arrangement?

Mr. MANN. The item relating to whisky is interjected in between educational items and does not look well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the proposed transfer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Transfer lines 7 and 8 to follow line 2 on the same page, and the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota to follow line 8.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the change will be made.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois to reserve a point of order?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve a point of order on the amendment until I hear the gentleman's explanation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this provides substantially what is covered by the paragraph in the bill found on page 3, lines 15 to 19, that went out yesterday on a point of order. That provision was placed in the bill believing that there should be a substantial appropriation for the treatment of infectious and contagious diseases among Indians, and to prevent the spread of these diseases to the white population in the localities where the Indians reside. This amendment is drawn somewhat in a different form, and I believe is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am not up in medical matters, but is not this disease of trachoma the eye disease that the Asiatics have?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How do the Indians get it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not know; many of them have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Where did they get it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am unable to inform the gentleman, except that I know they do have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is strange that the American Indians should have it when the white people and the colored people of America do not.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The white people do have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Where do they have it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In the eyes. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know, but in what geographical location of the United States?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Up in the vicinity of Arizona and in New Mexico and California, and somewhat in the State of Missouri, I am told.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Oh, I do not believe that.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I hope that the gentleman is correct in his disbelief.

Mr. MANN. They have political trachoma there.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They did the year before last; yes. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, my information, obtained from the reservations in Arizona, is that the disease has been communicated to the Indians by way of Mexico, because of Chinamen who come across the line and get into these reservations. Then, too, some of the Indians of Arizona live partly in Sonora, Old Mexico, and partly in the United States. Chinamen are not prohibited from coming into Mexico, and they come across the line into the reservation of the United States. This is also true of Japanese. This trachoma has come through Mexico and through the Indians that live partly in Mexico and partly in the United States.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I want to be pardoned just a moment for making a statement that does not have reference to this proposed amendment. I want to make it because the question came up yesterday when I made a statement and the distinguished gentleman from Illinois took issue with it. That was in regard to expenditures in the Indian Department—that there should be no deficiencies created. I want now to call attention to the existing law, found in Eighteenth Statutes, 450, section 6, which reads as follows:

> And no expenditure shall be made or liability incurred on the part of the Government on account of the Indian Service for any fiscal year (unless in compliance with existing law) beyond the amount of money previously appropriated for said service during such year.

I merely make that statement because I said yesterday on the floor that there was a special law prohibiting deficiencies in the Indian Service, and I want to cite the statute to sustain what I then stated.

Mr. Chairman, to come back to this proposed amendment, I stated I did not believe it is subject to a point of order. I think that it has always been recognized that the President of the United States has wide authority and great power over the subject of regulations and control of Indians. Section 2114 of the Revised Statutes provides:

> That the President is authorized to exercise general superintendence and care over any tribe or nation of Indians that was removed upon an exchange of territory under the authority of the act of May 28, 1830.

That act had reference to the removal of the Indians east of the Mississippi River, and the descendants of those tribes comprise to-day fully two-thirds, if not more, of all the Indians in the United States. If the President has jurisdiction over these Indians as to their care and general superintendence, as the statute reads, it certainly is proper to make an appropriation that will be available in order that he may enforce such regulations as he may promulgate affecting Indians. This is a serious matter, and I would very much dislike to have this House decline to make some appropriation to meet this condition which now confronts us. I find in the early sixties and practically for fifty years we have made appropriations for the purchase of vaccine and for vaccination among the Indians.

I find that for several years we have made appropriations for the relief of distressed Indians, Indians who did not belong to any tribe, Indians that are wanderers on the face of the earth, Indians who may be sick and without any friend or place to go for comfort or support, and an appropriation has been provided. Very little money has ever been expended to care for this class of Indians.

Mr. MANN. I would ask whether there is an appropriation in the current law for that purpose?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The appropriation for that purpose, I will say to the gentleman, was made in the appropriation act for 1899, the amount being $20,000. It was a continuing appropriation, and is not yet quite exhausted.

Mr. MANN. I do not desire to be captious about this point at all, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. One or more years ago there was an epidemic or a very vicious outbreak of trachoma discovered among the Indians in Arizona. It was so serious that it was brought by the department to the attention of Congress, and $12,000 was appropriated promptly as an emergency appropriation for the care and treatment of the Indians so afflicted. It was then said:

> We have information to the effect that trachoma is a disease somewhat new to medical science. The Indians have had sore eyes all over the country for years, but it was not known that they were afflicted with trachoma.

Then there is the further statement that it is a peculiarly vicious disease, and if not cared for that it frequently results in total blindness.

In the treatment of this disease a surgical operation is necessary. It has been found that it yields to treatment; but if neglected, it results in total blindness. It is a very infectious or contagious disease, and it seems to me a subject of the highest importance that some action should be taken to suppress it.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? It is a disease that stops immigration on an examination by immigration physicians. Those who are afflicted with it, coming from China, are all stopped if they are afflicted with trachoma.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I ask, Mr. Chairman, for an extension of three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks that his time may be extended for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The statement made by the gentleman from California is correct. The Federal Government has been fighting this disease on its boundaries for some time in order to protect the country against infection through immigration. Another disease among the Indians that is very serious and in some localities is causing great havoc among them is tuberculosis, and it seems, Mr. Chairman, as if we ought to take some steps to suppress it and to treat the unfortunates who are afflicted. The objection on the part of the gentleman from Illinois yesterday, if I understood him, was that he did not wish to have an appropriation that would look toward creating in a department of the Government a medical department or some corps of physicians which might be regarded as a separate and distinct organization. I am absolutely with him on that proposition, and so is every member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, but we did feel that this is a subject of such importance that there should be an appropriation looking toward the suppression of the disease, the treatment of it, and, if possible, to entirely eradicate it from among the Indians, not only for their good alone, but for the good of the people generally in the country. I hope that my friend will not insist upon his objection, but if he does, Mr. Chairman, I wish the Chair to consider the statutes to which I have referred, to examine the wording of the proposed amendment; and, I believe, if he does so, he will conclude that it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt at all in my mind that the item is subject to the point of order, as far as that is concerned. I have examined the statute, and the gentleman from South Dakota has, and the item does not conform to the statute, and there is no authority of law for this appropriation in the form in which the item is inserted. But, as I stated to the gentleman yesterday, as far as I am concerned I have no objection to a reasonable appropriation for the purpose of giving the Indians the benefit of vaccination, or studying the disease of trachoma. The objection that I particularly have, the objection I still feel is valid, is against, at this time at least, creating a new medical department of the Government in the Indian Service. As I stated yesterday, the President in his recent message strongly urged the Congress to consolidate all of the medical and sanitary bureaus of the Government into one bureau, except the army and navy Surgeons-General offices, and I had yesterday in my pocket a bill which I was asked to introduce, which I have not introduced, and probably will not in the form in which it is, which I was told had the personal approval of the President of the United States, for the purpose of still further consolidating all of these different branches of the Government; and under the provisions of that bill, if it were carried out in its present form, all of these bureaus would be consolidated in this new bureau. We now maintain a Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service. The Marine-Hospital Service is but a small detail of it. It is for the very purpose of studying diseases like trachoma, for the very purpose of studying diseases like tuberculosis, for the very purpose of taking it under the Public-Health Service, so far as it relates to the National Government, but I am not in favor at this time, indirectly or directly, of creating a new medical bureau in connection with the Indian Service. Now, that was the plain proposition——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. None of them are.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says none of them are; but the trouble is that the department recommends that such be the case, and it states that if the money be appropriated, it will do that, and you give them the money, with a small cut.

I do not know whether $20,000 is needed or not. You had $5,000 last year for vaccine and vaccination, and I dare say it was not all used. You had $12,000 for trachoma, and I dare say it was not all used. Now, if you undertake to treat all Indians with tuberculosis, it will not require $20,000, but a million dollars and more. It will require the building of sanatoriums galore throughout the United States.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the gentleman will permit me, the $12,000 for trachoma was all used.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps it was not a sufficient amount.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that it has been found, I think, by those competent to determine, that in the treament of tuberculosis sanitariums are not necessary, and that it is treated in camps and tents preferably to buildings, and not in any ordinary building such as are used in connection with hospitals and sanitariums.

Mr. MANN. Well, I did not mention sanitariums; I mentioned sanatoriums. There is a distinction, I will say. I have had occasion not only as a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to study this subject, but I have had occasion personally to study it, and I know something about its treatment. You can not cure Indians of tuberculosis for $20,000, or even commence to do so. If the Government is to commence the work in place of the States, there is absolutely no limit to the thing. If you could teach the Indians to live in the open air as they used to do largely, they probably would not be troubled with tuberculosis much; but, I take it, that is impossible. You can not teach the present generation to live where they will breathe cool and fresh air. We are a people who live in steam-heated flats, and as long as we do that in this world you can not abolish tuberculosis.

But if the gentleman says that they use $20,000 for these purposes—

Without creating a competent medical corps in charge of a chief—

I am reading from the estimates; that is what the item is for—creating a competent medical corps in charge of a chief, with headquarters at Salt Lake City, assisted by at least five assistant medical officers, to be distributed throughout the Indian country.

I have no objection to providing the material or the assistance in Indian reservations or in connection with the Indian agencies those things which may be fairly necessary to protect the health of the Indians where the States are under no obligation. I do not want to see organized to do this work, while another committee has consideration of this subject in its broader aspect, a new medical department of the Government.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have already stated that the committee took exactly the position set forth by the gentleman in fixing the amount proposed to be appropriated, and did so upon express condition that there was to be no new bureau, as he has mentioned and as appears in the estimates, stating further that if we found anything of that kind and we were here when the next Indian appropriation bill was considered, it would be very doubtful whether or not we would continue any appropriation whatever. I think the bureau understands pretty well that that is our position.

Mr. MANN. Is that in the hearings anywhere?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It was in the hearings, but the hearings have not been published.

Mr. MANN. The hearings were not printed?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think the Indian Office understands that?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think they do, most certainly. We consented to recommend an appropriation with the distinct understanding that it was not to be expended as suggested in the estimates which the gentleman has referred to.

Mr. MANN. Then I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collection and transportation of pupils to and from Indian schools, and for the transportation of Indian pupils from any and all Indian schools and placing them, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of white families qualified to give such pupils moral, industrial, and educational training, $70,000: Provided, That not to exceed $5,000 of this amount may be used in the transportation and placing of Indian pupils in positions where remunerative employment may be found for them in industrial pursuits. The provisions of this section shall also apply to native pupils brought from Alaska.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee one or two questions. There is provision made here for schools. Can the gentleman tell me just what is taught in those Indian schools?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Why, generally everything within the range of education.

Mr. GOULDEN. Do they have manual training, and are they taught any of the trades, so as to make the Indians able to support themselves?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In many schools they do have manual training—agriculture and forestry, and, in fact, everything.

Mr. GOULDEN. Are there any schools above the ordinary grammar school, as we understand them in the East?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The schools referred to here, I may say without exception, are not above the ordinary common grammar school.

Mr. GOULDEN. I presume the gentleman will admit teaching these Indians trades, how to farm and cook, and all useful things, would be essential and very important in the instruction of these Indians to make them self-supporting citizens.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I consider this is largely the solution of the Indian problem. That is, to give him a good common-school education and then educate him along industrial and agricultural lines.

Mr. GOULDEN. One more question. That is, Are these Indian schools, such as the Carlisle School, productive of good results? Do these children that are taught there go back to the tribes and become self-supporting, or do they return to tribal conditions?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There is no school that is doing better work in my judgment at the present time than is the Carlisle School. While some of the pupils who graduate from that school may return to their reservations and retrograde or turn out worthless, it is the exception, and not the rule.

Mr. GOULDEN. As I understand the chairman, the children of the present Indian schools show a marked improved condition over those of, say, ten years ago.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Very much so.

Mr. GOULDEN. Showing that the Indian has improved his manner of living and his ability to support himself.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Very much, indeed. And I want to say, that what has happened in the last ten years is along the line that in my judgment is going to very largely solve the Indian problem in the present generation.

Mr. GOULDEN. I am very glad to hear it and hope that conditions will continue to improve. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill some questions. Has the committee any statistics showing how many of the Indian pupils of the Carlisle School have returned to their tribes and taken up again the tribe habits, thereafter leading the life of their parents, brothers, and sisters, and members of the tribe?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I can only say in answer to that inquiry, Mr. Chairman, that I endeavored to get some information from the superintendents of the different agencies in my own State, and I ascertained that the percentage of those who turned out to be worthless was comparatively small.

Mr. TAWNEY. The reason I asked that question is this: A few years ago, together with some other gentlemen, I visited an Indian village in New Mexico, near Albuquerque, where there were seven graduates from the Carlisle School; all of them wore blankets, and not one of them would speak a word of English. They had all gone back, and were living with their parents and with the Indians, and did the same as the other Indians. They were not necessarily worthless, but had simply gone back, and the only way they could live comfortably and peaceably was to live as their bothers and sisters or other members of the tribe lived.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I wish to say to my friend from Minnesota, that if I understood him he stated that was several years ago.

Mr. TAWNEY. Three or four years ago.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Conditions on the reservations are changing very rapidly, and are quite different from what they were even three or four years ago. I made the statement the other day in general debate that if the Indian was anything he was human, and I want to reiterate that statement. It is true that Indian children have left their reservation homes and have gone some distance to schools, and have returned after a few years of absence attired entirely in clothing that perhaps was unknown among their Indian friends and relations. They speak the English language; their hair has been cut; and they are quite different from what they were when they left. Very naturally they are hazed more or less, just as you or I would be in the same conditions. They will return to some extent to the customs of their associates. The Indians of the country, generally, to-day are in a different environment from what they were a few years ago. The surplus lands are being opened up and disposed of to white settlers.

Indians generally are surrounded by a white population, whose towns are among the Indians, and, as stated, their environment is quite different. So I think from this time on these pupils who return from Carlisle and these other schools will not, in the same proportion, retrograde as they may have done in years past, especially several years ago.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I think the remarks of the gentleman in charge of the bill only emphasizes the necessity of our obtaining, either through the Census Bureau or through some other bureau, accurate information regarding the number of pupils who are graduated at the Carlisle School who again return to their tribes or to their families and take up the life of the native Indians as they were living it before becoming educated. I have no criticism at all in regard to the education of the Indians upon the reservations. I believe that is the only practical and successful way to educate the Indian and improve his material condition, because then they are educated while living among their own people. The transition is gradual, and their families become accustomed to it; but when they are taken away from their homes to far-distant States, educated, and then returned to live among their people, they must of necessity, in order to live peaceably and happily among their associates, live as their associates do, and this I know from personal knowledge has been the result in a great many cases. You can not educate a whole family of Indians by taking one member of that family to some distant State, educate him there, and then have him return again to the family, and thereby raise the standard of education and civilization of all members of the family. Therefore, in order to determine whether or not the school at Carlisle is as efficient in the education and civilization of the Indians as some people have heretofore claimed, or as efficient as the reservation school, I think we ought to have some accurate and reliable information regarding the percentage of Indians educated at the Carlisle institution who have returned to their families and again assumed the habits and manner of living which prevails among his or her uneducated and uncivilized associates.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Along with the chairman of the committee, I thoroughly agree in the educational process of elevating the Indians, but it strikes me that there ought to be a limit somewhere. Yesterday evening there was an item passed in this bill appropriating $1,420,000 to educate children, in particular cases and instances where there were no specific appropriations for that purpose. In the section under consideration is another item of $70,000 intended to pay for the education of children in private families. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether or not the Government has experimented along that line heretofore with Indian pupils, and if so, to what extent?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman is mistaken in regard to the amount that is proposed to be used for this purpose. The amount I believe is $5,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The amount is $5,000 for fathering and procuring employment.

Mr. FERRIS. Remunerative employment for Indians.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Remunerative employment for Indians.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say in answer to the gentleman's inquiry that I have observed the effect of this kind of education, and I think it is one of the best things that has ever been done up to the present time for the Indians, and particularly the girls.

Mr. COX of Indiana. To what extent has the Government experimented along that line heretofore, if any?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It is one of the things that has been a part of the education at Carlisle for some little time. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. YOUNG], I think perhaps can give the gentleman some information as to this very subject that may be interesting to him and the other members of the committee.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The language contained in the paragraph under consideration, as I read it, is for the transportation of pupils to and from Indian schools, and then the transportation of Indian pupils from Indian schools to private families.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. To be used in the private families?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. For their moral education and training along that line?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Now, the question I propound and upon which I am seeking information is: To what extent, if any, has the Government experimented along that line heretofore?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. YOUNG], who, I think, can answer that more satisfactorily than I can.

Mr. YOUNG of New York. Mr. Chairman, I will say for the information of the gentleman that I have given careful study to the conditions existing at the Carlisle School in observing the work of the industrial department carefully, and I consider it one of the most important institutions and one of the most important efforts for the education and civilization of the Indian that has ever been taken in hand in this country. During the vacation season the male and female pupils are sent, under supervision of those in charge of the school, to farmers and families throughout the country within a distance of 25 or 30 miles from Carlisle. They are placed under the supervision of these families and there are taught industrial pursuits and domestic economy.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Are the families who take the children paid for their work?

Mr. YOUNG of New York. They are not; the transportation of the pupil back and forth is paid, and the farmers or those who have the pupils in charge pay for their services, clothe and feed them, and send them back to the school properly equipped.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the farmer or the people who take these pupils, whoever they may be, receive any pay for the work?

Mr. YOUNG of New York. No; they pay for the services.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Whom do they pay?

Mr. YOUNG of New York. They furnish them with clothing and feed them, and I think they pay them a slight compensation for their service.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Are the pupils taken by the farmers made to work—that is, do they work for the people to whom they are sent?

Mr. YOUNG of New York. They do; and I have never observed a case where the pupil was not returned very much improved.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then, the Government has been experimenting along these lines heretofore?

Mr. YOUNG of New York. That is correct.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman give any idea of the number of pupils who have been educated along that line per year?

Mr. YOUNG of New York. I should say, of the thousand pupils in the Carlisle School, at least 500 of them have been sent out annually.

Mr. COX of Indiana. This entire appropriation of $70,000, or whatever it may be, is intended to defray the expenses of the transportation of pupils from the Indian schools to and from the places where they are taught?

Mr. YOUNG of New York. Oh, no; only $5,000 of it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Well, I want to call the gentleman's attention to the first part of the paragraph, where it appropriates $70,000. I am a little confused as to this language.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is undoubtedly confused in this paragraph. This is an appropriation that is carried annually in the Indian appropriation act, and is for the transportation of Indian pupils to and from the several schools throughout the country.

Mr. COX of Indiana. From home to the school and return?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. From their homes to the schools and return.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And the gentleman says that only $5,000 of this appropriation is for the purpose of transporting the pupils to these families to whom they are sent?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Only $5,000 of the amount may be used for that express purpose. I will say for the information of the gentleman that last year there was expended for that purpose the sum of $300.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Who determines the qualifications of the families to which the pupils are sent?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The superintendent in charge of the school in that locality.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Now, all these remarks have been addressed to the Carlisle School alone. Does the same rule apply to all of the Indian schools?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. To a limited extent only. The superintendents are very careful not to put children out in families without knowing that they will have proper care and their welfare looked after as much as if they remained in the school. I will say for the benefit of the gentleman that in my home town there is an Indian school. In my home we have had in the past five years a greater part of the time an Indian girl, sometimes two, from the school employed as domestics, and we pay them compensation the same as we would pay any other employee, and during the vacation season especially, if they can be put into desirable homes, it is a much better thing to do than to keep them in the school.

Mr. GOULDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GOULDEN. I would like to ask my colleague from New York [Mr. YOUNG] some questions. He speaks of four or five hundred children of the Carlisle School being sent to these homes. When are they sent, after graduation or during vacation periods only?

Mr. YOUNG of New York. I will say that they are sent immediately after the close of the school.

Mr. GOULDEN. Regardless of whether they have graduated or not?

Mr. YOUNG of New York. Oh, yes; and the result has been a most desirable one. I have studied many cases, and I am sure if the Members of this House could observe the working of the sending out of those Indians into the families of white people, they would encourage it to the greatest extent possible.

Mr. GOULDEN. I may say that I am familiar with Carlisle and its surroundings and can indorse what my colleague has said, but I did not know just what period of the year or at just what time of their course they were sent to these farmers and others.

Mr. YOUNG of New York. From the closing of the school in June until the opening of the school in the fall.

Mr. GOULDEN. What time does the school open in the fall?

Mr. YOUNG of New York. In September.

Mr. GOULDEN. I notice that the chairman has told us only $300 of the $5,000 was expended. Can the gentleman tell us why the $5,000 is included in the bill when but $300 was expended last year, and how it was possible to take four or five hundred children and send them around that section of the country for $300?

Mr. YOUNG of New York. In many cases the families desiring to take the Indians send their own conveyances, as far as 25 miles, to get them and they take them to their homes, and they are under very careful supervision while there. Representatives of the school visit the homes frequently and watch in the most careful manner the conduct of the families, and the families are required periodically, almost every fortnight, to make reports of the progress the Indian is making in the family.

Mr. GOULDEN. I am satisfied with the explanation of my colleague [Mr. YOUNG], except that no answer has been given to my question why $5,000 was put into this bill when but $300 was necessary. This seems uncalled for.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. There has been much said about these children leaving Carlisle and other schools during vacation and spending their time with families in various pursuits, but I believe there has been nothing said about the reason why this is done and why it is thought best by the superintendents or the authorities to do it. Those pupils go to Carlisle and other nonreservation schools from their tribes. If they spend but one year they perhaps learn nothing more than to speak the English language. If at the end of that school year they return to the tribe, almost invariably they do just what the gentleman from Minnesota has said, "don the blanket, and they are Indians again;" but if they are employed by white people, if they are not permitted to return home, they adopt the habits of the whites. It is as much of an education, in fact, as the education that they get during the school days. The best Indians that we have, the best equipped and the best educated, are those who go to Carlisle and other nonreservation schools and spend four or five or six years or more without returning home, and when they have done that they go thoroughly equipped for business pursuits. As to whether they return to the blanket depends upon local conditions. The best educator for the Indian is to put a white man on four sides of him. If they return to the tribes, where tribal customs and habits prevail, they will almost invariably return to the blanket and the Indian language, but if they return to a community where the white customs prevail and where white people live in numbers, the chances are they will continue to speak the English language and almost invariably under circumstances of that kind they will proceed to some sort of business.

The Indian is no different in his nature from the white people. Some of them will succeed and some will not; but when you have put them in these institutions and have given them an education, you have equipped them, and when they find it necessary they are equipped for pursuits of life. As a rule in my State they come back prepared for business and enter some avocation and succeed. There are a few who do not, but the same, I apprehend, would be true of the white people; but the best-educated and the best equipped and prepared Indians are those who go to school and never return to their tribes until they have completed their education.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask this question purely for information. How do they determine who shall avail themselves of this education or what particular Indian shall have the opportunity of attending these higher schools? It is apparent that they can not all have it.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. If the Indian child desires to attend school, he always has an opportunity, as I understand it; but they have been unable to fill these nonreservation schools by the Indians coming of their own motion. They send out teachers during vacation to the various tribes for the purpose of inducing the Indian pupils to go to the nonreservation schools.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, do I understand that these important nonreservation schools go begging, so to speak?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. They do.

Mr. FERRIS. And it is hard to get pupils to attend them?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That is quite true as to a number of them. It is true as to one or two of the nonreservation schools in my own State, possibly the school the gentleman from Oklahoma, my colleague, has in mind.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman think that is true of Carlisle?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I do not understand it to be true of Carlisle. I understand the Carlisle School is filled without any effort in this way.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will permit me again right there, how do they determine who shall and who shall not attend the Carlisle School? Out in my State, where we have approximately 130,000 to 140,000 Indians, a great many more would like to go to that school if they had the opportunity, and I would like to know by what method, by what competitive arrangement, if any such exists, is an applicant for attendance at this school permitted to enter it?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I understand it is necessary for the pupil to have some training and some education before he is permitted to enter Carlisle. The reservation schools in the various States and Territories, I understand, are considered as preparatory schools for the Carlisle institution. I do not know just what the equipment should be or what is required of the pupil, but I understand it is necessary for him to have some education, some preparatory course.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will yield a moment further, does not the gentleman think that if the nonreservation schools are as good as they are reputed to be, there should be some competitive test whereby, either by ability, mental or disposition, or in some way, persons could enter this school according to some regular order and not just go and select one here and one there and leave hundreds behind who desire the education but who are unable to get it at this school? It seems to me that is the most important part of this whole transaction.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I am not prepared to say whether it should be carried to the point of a competitive examination before a person desiring to do so should enter the Carlisle School or any other nonreservation school. I have not been advised heretofore of any Indian pupil who has found any difficulty in entering any of the schools——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it not a fact the nonreservation boarding schools have had great difficulty in obtaining enough pupils to fill them?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That is a fact as to a number; but I do not understand that is the universal rule.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to correct the two gentlemen from Oklahoma as to two erroneous statements which I think they have made. It is not my understanding that it requires any education of any certain grade to enter the Carlisle School. I have visited the Carlisle Indian School, and found children who could barely speak English, so they could not have much English education. I want to correct the other gentleman from Oklahoma in the statement as to the number of Indians in Oklahoma. I think there are not now 101,000 in Oklahoma and——

Mr. FERRIS. That is in the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. CARTER. In all.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the gentleman is mistaken. Although I was only approximating.

Mr. CARTER. About 75,000 or 80,000 in the Five Civilized Tribes——

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will yield, I feel sure he is entirely mistaken—101,000 in the Five Tribes, and in addition the scattering tribes on the Oklahoma side.

Mr. CARTER. There are about 75,000 or 80,000 in the Five Civilized Tribes and 16,000 in the old Oklahoma, as I understand.

Mr. FERRIS. Then the gentleman has not examined the recent report, for it shows 101,469, including freedmen and intermarried whites on the Five Tribes' side of the State.

Mr. CARTER. I examined the report of the Indian Office of last year, and I do not presume they have grown 25,000 in one year. There may be 101,000 in the entire State, 16,000 in old Oklahoma and 85,000 in the Five Civilized Tribes, and those in the Five Civilized Tribes are not permitted to go to the Carlisle School by some ruling of the Interior Department; and I think that this ruling is unjust, and those tribes should be permitted to attend these schools, the same as other Indians.

Mr. PARSONS. According to this year's report of the Indian Bureau the number of Indians in Oklahoma is 117,370.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from New York must remember that about 20,000 or 25,000 of those, something like that, are not Indians at all, but are freedmen—negroes, former slaves of these Indians, who have no Indian blood, but are on the freedmen rolls.

Mr. FERRIS. I did not understand the distinction the gentleman from Oklahoma desired to make, as separating them, although I think it a highly proper one, for, in my judgment, the negroes should not be on the rolls at all; and inasmuch as they are on the rolls, I am in favor of reimbursing the Indians for every acre so allotted to negroes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And have never until this year been enumerated as Indians.

Mr. CARTER. I think not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "pursuits," in line 22, page 6, amend as follows:
"Provided further, That the children of an Indian who is a taxpayer, citizen, and a voter of any State shall not be entitled to any part of this transportation fund."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is in keeping with the amendment that I offered and that was voted down yesterday, and is not subject to a point of order, under the ruling of the Chair, on that amendment, and I think that this amendment should prevail and become a part of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that I am opposed to all these nonreservation Indian schools. I believe the Indian children should be educated in their daily schools upon the reservations. I think where they attend schools upon their reservations that the influence of these reservation schools tends to educate the parents and the smaller and the older children as well as the students, and also benefits the entire tribe. All the money that we expend on the education of the Indians should be spent inside of the reservations, and in that respect I am in accord with the views of the Indian Rights Association, and I am in accord with the views of the past, and, I understand, the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and also of many students and persons who have studied this Indian question. They take the same view of it that I do, and, as stated by several of the gentlemen on the floor to-day, these Indians, when they return from Carlisle and other schools to the reservations, adopt the habits of their parents.

Mr. Chairman, educating Indian children and sending them back to their reservations would be like the folly of this city in putting up a splendid plant for filtering their drinking water and after filtering it turning it back into the river from which it was taken originally—the Potomac, for instance. That is exactly what we are doing. We are taking from Indian reservations all over this country Indian children and carrying them hundreds and sometimes more than a thousand miles to schools like Carlisle and other nonreservation schools, placing them in those schools, and spending $167 per annum on each child, and then, when educated, they are sent back to the reservations, and, as stated by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], some of them will not speak the English language to a white man visiting their reservation. He stated that he saw four at one time on a reservation that would speak. I know that his statement is true from my own personal experience and observation.

Our money would be better spent in industrial and day schools, teaching the children, and their parents as well, how to make a living by farming and stock raising than in any other way. We can never educate an Indian tribe by taking Indian children and sending them across the continent in some cases to the nonreservation schools. I do not believe we should educate at any place, or at any time, the child of a father who is a voter, a citizen, and a taxpayer of the State where he lives. These children should be turned over to the States. They should be sent to the state schools in their own neighborhood and on their reservations. The State provides means for the education of the children of the State; and certainly no State should object to educating its citizens, be they white, red, or black children. If we ever solve this Indian problem, Mr. Chairman, we must solve it by industrial education, thus making them respectable and responsible citizens.

They should be sent to school from their homes and educated among the people where they must live. We will have the same result, as was stated by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] in regard to the Carlisle Indians, if we continue the policy that we have adopted and have carried out for many years, and I regard the method of educating Indians in nonreservation schools as a useless expenditure of public money.

While on the floor I desire to make this statement in reference to the transportation of Indian pupils to nonreservation schools. Agents for the schools have been sent out under this appropriation all over the United States to fill up these nonreservation schools with Indian children, and, as stated by the gentleman from Oklahoma, they are seeking students everywhere for their schools. They send out these agents to get students so that their school may have the money—$167 for each student that is enrolled. It is a bribe for them to secure pupils in any way they can be had, whether under age or over age.

As the result of that policy I will say that a few years ago I received letters from several Mexican citizens of El Paso, that city being a part of my district, asking me to see the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and ask that about 20 or 30 pupils of the Chilocco School be returned to El Paso, saying they were not Indians, but that they were Mexicans, that had been induced by agents of this Indian school to attend the school in Oklahoma.

All Mexicans have Indian blood, being a mixture of the original Indians, the Aztecs, and the Spaniards, and as it is true they have Indian blood in them, these Indian school agents went out and gathered up about 30 of these Mexican children living in El Paso and carried them off to this school. They soon became dissatisfied and homesick, and desired to return home. Their parents wrote to me, for the purpose of having them returned home.

I had an investigation instituted, and the facts stated by me were found to be true and the children were sent back to their homes. Now this case was only one sample of the results obtained by this appropriation of money to send men out over the Indian country and gather up Indian children by every kind of device, so as to fill up the school they represented, so as to draw from the Treasury the $160 per capita. Mr. Chairman, for these reasons I am opposed to the whole nonreservation-school project. I believe every dollar appropriated for the education of Indians should be spent upon the reservation day and industrial schools.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas will not prevail. I wish to say to my good friend from Texas, who has had very long experience as a Member of this House and as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, he is always capable of furnishing us much information upon the subject of these Indians, and I always listen to him with a great deal of interest. I know, and so do others here in the House, that on this question of the education of Indian children he has always been opposed to nonreservation schools. His position is therefore entirely consistent, but I do not think this is the time or occasion to go into that. I want to say, however, in reply to his suggestion that agents go out over the country, that under the administration of the last commissioner, Mr. Leupp, an order was issued, and is still in force, prohibiting agents from going out. If I remember correctly, that order is limited now to the superintendent, and no one from a nonreservation school is permitted to go on the reservation and solicit children.

This is practically the same amendment as that which was offered yesterday and voted down, and I hope this amendment will be voted down at the present time.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What does the gentleman say in response to the argument of the gentleman from Texas about the results that have been obtained in the way of education when this money has been spent on the reservation where the Indian pupils were taught, that those Indians had on their environment?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not agree with the gentleman in that particular.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Why?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have already said that on Indian matters the gentleman is well informed, and he and myself agree, as a rule, but we materially differ upon this subject.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Why does not the gentleman agree with the gentleman from Texas? It strikes me that his argument was very effective.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That would open the whole question. I will ask for a vote, in order that we may get along.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits, using Indian labor in the process; for the purpose of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations and removing dead timber, standing or fallen, therefrom, and to advise the Indians as to the proper care of forests, and to conduct such timber operations and sales of timber as may be deemed advisable and provided for by law, except on the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin; for the employment of suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian women housekeeping and other household duties, at a rate not to exceed $60 per month, and for furnishing necessary equipments and renting quarters for them where necessary; and for the employment of practical farmers and stockmen, subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, in addition to the agency and school farmers now employed, to superintend and direct farming and stock raising among Indians, $250,000: Provided, That the amounts paid to matrons, farmers, and stockmen herein provided for shall not come within the limit for employees fixed by the act of June 7, 1897.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph just read. In looking over last year's bill I notice that in this item the committee has included some three or four items that were carried separately in the bill of last year. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee what is the reason for combining these separate items in one, as carried in the present bill?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They are kindred subjects, and it was done in the interest of economy and the belief that we could reduce the appropriations from last year quite materially, and the estimates also. The estimates covered by this appropriation were $305,000, and we appropriate $250,000, or $10,000 less than last year. I want to say that this is an appropriation that has to do with the most important part, next to education, of the work that has been done among the Indians, namely, to promote industries, the growing of timber and experiments as to agriculture, and the pay of matrons and farmers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman think that it tends to economy when you lump together four items carrying these appropriations and vest in the head of the department the discretion to utilize any or all of the amount for any one item? For instance, in last year's bill there was but $5,000 appropriated for the item as carried in the first part of this provision to enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs "to conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms designed to test the possibilities of soil or climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits, using Indian labor in the process, $5,000."

Now, the point of my inquiry is this: In view of the policy that the committee has inaugurated this year of combining instead of segregating items, whether you believe it leads to economy; whether the Congress does not surrender its power of limitation over expenditures of existing appropriations when it vests in the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior the right to use any or all of the $250,000 here appropriated for that one item?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think not. The subjects, as I have already stated, are kindred—pertaining to the same thing, practically—and I see no reason why they should not be put in one item, especially when we felt that we could do so without injury to any part of the service and make a material reduction in the amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. Personally, from my experience in similar matters on other appropriation bills, I have come to the conclusion that it does not tend to economy when you make appropriations in bulk and fail to segregate them into the respective parts of which they are capable. My observation of the practices in other departments has led me to believe that it is always the wish of department officials to have lump-sum appropriations and to be free of limitation, and that it is the province and interest of Congress to exercise the minutest supervision over the respective appropriations and to limit them so far as possible. Whereas this body might be willing to appropriate $5,000 or $10,000 for experiments in the testing of soils and the cultivation of trees, as authorized in this item, we would not be willing to allow the Secretary of the Interior to expend $50,000 in that particular; and yet in this bill we surrender to him full authority to use any or all that amount or to use the balance that may not be called for in the other respective items.

Have we come to that pass where we are going to say to the heads of departments, "If you do not utilize all of the appropriation in the other items in the bill you may utilize the surplus fund for some other item?" You might just as well do away with any of the limitations and carry appropriations to the extent of $8,500,000 in one lump sum, and leave it to the discretion of the department head to use the funds as he may see fit. The gentleman's logic carries him to the extreme; that instead of holding the department heads to economy it leads them to extravagant practices, without any limitation whatsoever.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am very glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. When you detail and select out your items and define them accurately is it not your experience in these appropriations that the departments always expend every dollar you give to each item?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will examine the post-office appropriation bill, or any appropriation bill, he will find that there are many instances in which balances are left over, that necessarily go back into the Treasury, thus leading to economy of expenditure rather than extravagance.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If the appropriations in preceding years for these segregated items aggregate more than the amount we have given here; in other words, if by combining we have reduced them, is not the combination and reduction of the total in the interest of economy?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the gentleman is trying to make an imaginary case, that if we combine and limit the total amount, therefore that leads to economy. Far from it. If we segregate the various appropriations and limit the amounts that may be expended for each item, that leads to economy, whereas this new method of the Committee on Indian Affairs leads to extravagance.

Mr. SHERLEY. What happens as a result of putting them all in a lump-sum appropriation is that they spend everything that they want for the things that Congress thinks least of, and then create deficiencies in those things that Congress must supply, and come back later on and get the extra money.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am glad to have the observation of the gentleman from Kentucky, who has had such wide experience in these matters in connection with the Committee on Appropriations. It is the invariable experience of that committee, which has jurisdiction of deficiencies, that under the practice referred to they will expend large amounts in matters for which Congress does not wish to have the money expended, and they will then call upon the Committee on Appropriations for deficiency appropriations for absolutely necessary expenditures, thereby taking away the limitation that should be properly exercised by Congress.

It has been the aim and policy of Congress not to aggregate the items, but to delimit and separate and segregate them still further, so that Congress can have control over departmental action.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does the gentleman mean that if discretion is given to an executive officer of the Government he will invariably abuse it and spend the money for improper purposes?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not a question of propriety, because he has the authority, and we know from experience that the department generally wishes to have the greatest freedom possible in the expenditure of appropriations. We know more—that the department officials generally have a hobby which they wish to ride, and if Congress gives them the full authority to carry out that hobby they will spend more money than they otherwise would.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman point out the precise hobby which the department here wishes to ride?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not so well versed in the hobbies of this particular bureau, not being a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs; but I can see in this particular instance where you have omitted the limitation of salaries to be paid to these practical farmers and stockmen, which heretofore have been limited to $75 a month. That has been left out.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield to me, I think I can state one of the hobbies that they wish to ride. Speaking of the estimate for an appropriation they say, "This would permit the organization of an industrial corps similar to that outlined for the medical corps, whose assistants should travel among the Indians in their respective districts, with a view at all times to the establishment of new industries and improvement of methods and system of present industries among the Indians."

I will give the gentleman another: "To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to conduct experiments on Indian schools or agency farms desired to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits not hitherto raised in those neighborhoods, using Indian labor in the process."

The Indian Service wants to devote large sums of money to the cultivation of grains, fruit, and vegetables that has hitherto never been contemplated by the Indian appropriation bill and never heretofore provided for. That is covered by this item and that is the reason that these items are consolidated.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does the gentleman object to a proper consolidation of that sort of appropriation?

Mr. MANN. Of course I do; everybody objects to it; it never has been done before.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is it not possible to do anything new that is proper in the history of the Indian government?

Mr. MANN. It may not be impossible, and I hope the gentleman may accomplish it some time.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If we do we will not have the assistance of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Very likely, nor of anybody else; it will be an accident. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is there any way to get rid of these lump-sum appropriations?

Mr. MANN. I will say that here is an item now for $250,000, which in the current law is carried in one item of $5,000 for one purpose, another item of $100,000 for another purpose, another item of $30,000 for another, and another item of $125,000 for another purpose. It was so estimated for, but the Committee on Indian Affairs has reversed the policy of this House and has not segregated the appropriations, but has lumped them into one item.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did we not sort of agree a year or two ago that we would eliminate the lump-sum appropriations?

Mr. MANN. We not only had that understanding in the House, but in the recent agricultural bill, when reported to the House, that committee not only did away with the lump-sum appropriation, as far as possible, but so far segregated the appropriations for Forest Service that they appropriated specifically for each forest reservation, which I hope the distinguished chairman of this committee will follow in the next Indian appropriation bill, and I believe he will.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why not recommit this bill with instructions?

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is another proposition.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard some time in this discussion. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Now, I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the current law provided $5,000 to conduct experiments in the Indian school agencies designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits not hitherto raised in those neighborhoods, using Indian labor in the process. There is a limitation to the amount; there is a limitation to the purpose. Both these items in this bill are omitted, and the Indian department is seeking the power from Congress to run large farms. I take it that that is the reason for the elimination of the provisions, in order to give the Indian department the right to conduct a farm on a large scale, using Indian labor. What other reasons are there for that?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that I have a higher regard and more respect for the administrative officers of the Government than has my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. It has been attempted to create the impression here that this bill has been changed in form materially, and that we are now dealing with lump-sum appropriations, whereas heretofore the appropriations have been separated into smaller items, and one might think that we had brought in a bill here to appropriate a certain amount of money and turn it over to some bureau of the Government to expend at their absolute discretion. What are the facts? We found in existing law, following the form of bills that were heretofore passed in this House, appropriations separated, covering kindred subjects, where there was no reason on top of earth for segregating the appropriations, and we concluded that where appropriations were for one particular purpose they ought to be in one item in the bill. We found that it has been the policy of Congress in the past, where these appropriations were separate, to provide that the unexpended balances for one purpose might be used for the same purpose for which there were other appropriations. Here is one item in the current law:

That any moneys appropriated in this act for the general and incidental expenses of the Indian Service in certain States and Territories, including traveling expenses of agents, which are not needed in the particular States or Territories for which provided, may be used for the same kind of expenses elsewhere, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Then we find this to be the law, not a limitation:

The funds provided for the pay of specified employees at any Indian agency, when not required for the purpose for which appropriated, may be used by the Secretary of the Interior for pay of other employees at such agency.

Mr. Chairman, as I stated the other day on this subject, we are now dealing with the Indian question somewhat differently than in years past. The service is divided into different branches, and this item is to cover the expenses of the matrons and farmers, the experimenting in agriculture, and one or two other items, and it seemed to the committee entirely proper that we should make one appropriation covering these several subjects, and by doing so we reduce the estimate by $55,000 and the appropriation of last year by $10,000.

We might have reduced it very much more, but, Mr. Chairman, it was the opinion of the committee that this branch of the service should not be handicapped, but should be liberally treated. I stated in my remarks the other day that I would be in favor of increasing rather than decreasing this particular appropriation, because I believe it is reaching a subject that is accomplishing more for the good of the Indian and in making him self-supporting than any other branch of the service.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says the amount appropriated has been reduced $10,000 by segregating this. Is the gentleman aware that there was $10,000 of the amount appropriated for this year which was made available in the last fiscal year, so that what you now appropriate was the amount really made available for this fiscal year, and there is no reduction at all?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not understand the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MANN. The appropriation in reference to forests for the current fiscal year is $100,000, but $10,000 of that was made available in the last fiscal year, so the appropriation really available for this fiscal year is only $90,000. The gentleman makes no reduction at all.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that we have gone into a wider field than in the last appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am talking of what the gentleman said he had reduced the amount.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman state what the theory was on which he classes these particular items together? Why were these classed together rather than any other items?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Simply because these have reference to kindred subjects.

Mr. SHERLEY. In what sense are they kindred subjects? Are cultivation of trees, and so forth, and employing matrons to teach children how to housekeep kindred subjects?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They certainly are. This is a branch of the service that is in the field entirely and along the line of industrial education.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then anything that relates to money that is expended by agents among the Indians ought to be grouped together. Is that the idea?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If it has to do with one subject.

Mr. SHERLEY. This does not have to do with one subject.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It has to do with kindred subjects.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman think that tending to timber is a kindred subject with teaching children how to housekeep?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think there is not much distinction.

Mr. SHERLEY. Not much distinction between housekeeping and looking after timber lands?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think it would be very proper to group together appropriations for a hired man and appropriations for a hired girl.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman another question. What is the reason for the proviso?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I did not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to know what is the reason for the proviso?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will read for the information of the gentleman from the act of June 7, 1907:

That hereafter not more than $10,000 shall be paid in any one year for salaries or compensation for employees regularly employed by any one agency for its conduct and management, and the number and kind of employees at each agency shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and none other shall be employed: Provided, That where two or more Indian agencies have been or may hereafter be consolidated, the expenditures in the consolidated agencies for regular employees shall not exceed $5,000: Provided further, That salaries or compensation of agents, Indians, school employees of every description and persons temporarily employed in case of emergency to prevent loss of life and property, in the erection of buildings, the work of irrigation and making other permanent improvements, shall not be construed as coming within the limitations fixed by the foregoing paragraphs.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then if I understand the gentleman from the reading of that law, the purpose of the proviso is to remove any restrictions that might exist as to the number of employees that you might have under the $250,000. Is that right?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think that is correct, but I did not quite understand the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I will state it again. I want to know if the real purpose of the proviso is to remove any possible limitation upon the number of persons who may be employed under this item of $250,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; the provision has been carried in every Indian appropriation act to permit the employment of certain employees of this class regardless of this limitation.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, may I ask the gentleman another question for information? Is there any warrant in law for these various items that are put together?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Oh, undoubtedly. Section 2071, I think, covers it.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman has it at hand——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have not the statute here, but I can send and get it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from South Dakota that the statute is available here, if he desires to see that particular section.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This, I think, is section 2071 of the Revised Statutes:

The President may, in every case where he shall judge improvement in the habits and conditions of such Indians practicable and that the means of instruction can be introduced with their consent, employ persons of good moral character to instruct them in the mode of agriculture suited to their situation, and for teaching their children in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and to perform such other duties as may be enjoined according to such instructions and rules as the President may give and prescribe for the regulation of their conduct in the discharge of their duties.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, the language read was broad, but I do not think it was quite as broad as some of the provisions, and it seems that the limitations in here would make that paragraph subject to the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think not, Mr. Chairman. It is within the discretion of the President to be exercised whenever—he shall judge improvement in the habits and conditions of such Indians practicable—

Quoting from the law. That is pretty broad, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word——

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order has been reserved, and I do not want that to be lost by an amendment.

Mr. MORSE. My amendment is for the purpose of asking the chairman a question. I would like to ask whether or not there is in this law, or in any other law, a limitation on the amount of money and wages to be paid to the farmers on an Indian reservation?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There is in the current act. There is not in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Permit me to say that in the former appropriation act there was a limitation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. A limitation; yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. But that is not carried in this bill.

Mr. MORSE. Does this proviso, Mr. Chairman, remove that limitation?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The proviso does not; we simply leave out the limitation.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is not permanent law. It is a limitation on the last appropriation bill only, I think.

Mr. MORSE. I think it has been customay to hire the farmers who are to instruct the Indians on the Indian reservations at sometimes as low as $60 a month, and in one case $75 a month. The result of that policy is shown in the kind of work that is accomplished by those $60-a-month men. On one reservation in Wisconsin, that I am quite familiar with, they have a cleared farm of 70 or 80 acres, and they buy hay and grain to feed the cattle the year round. They recently erected at Flambeau a silo, but they did not raise a pound of corn fodder or hay or peas, or anything else, to put into that silo.

Now, the fact is that on many reservations you are getting for the $60 a month a $60-a-month man, and the result is, as far as the Indians are concerned, and as far as the farm is concerned, absolute failure. I sincerely hope that under this provision the department will see fit to hire $1,800 farmers, and I am certain if they do the results obtained will justify the wages paid. We are hiring men to teach Indians how to farm, and they are men, in many cases, who have no idea of the subject they are supposed to teach. I sincerely hope the department will see fit to hire really good farmers, those who are capable of earning $1,800 a year, instead of $720.

Mr. GOULDEN. What was the purpose of erecting that silo if they did not raise anything to put into it?

Mr. MORSE. They supposed when they commenced to erect the silo they had a competent farmer there. The results proved otherwise. The farmer is getting $60 a month.

Mr. GOULDEN. Then the farmer was to blame?

Mr. MORSE. I think so; and I think that is true of a great many of the smaller reservations, namely, that the $60-a-month man is a failure, and I want to hire farmers worth three times that, and I think the results will justify the expenditure.

Mr. GOULDEN. Have you any farmers in Wisconsin worth three times that?

Mr. MORSE. I think we have. We have farmers in Wisconsin who are worth on their farms three times that.

Mr. GOULDEN. Then they would not hire out?

Mr. MORSE. I think at that price you could get a farmer who would make a success of the undertaking.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What is the average wage?

Mr. MORSE. There are very few of that kind of farmers who hire out. A man who is capable of earning that is not working for somebody else. We have the finest farming land in the whole world in northern Wisconsin. It is cheap, and a $1,800 a year man would go out and buy his own farm. Wisconsin is turning out every year competent, capable men. There is not on a single reservation, to my knowledge, in Wisconsin a scientifically trained farmer, and it is that kind of fellows we ought to have on the reservations.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Do you not believe that there are many hired men working on the farms for $30 a month who are practical farmers?

Mr. MORSE. No; that is the kind we do not want to instruct the Indians.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The fault in this particular case that you have mentioned was the sending of somebody there who did not understand farming, instead of the kind of farm?

Mr. MORSE. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, the committee did not adopt the provision which has been the subject of such criticism, either hastily, or unadvisedly. It is objected that we have grouped a number of items that are not properly related to each other. This objection is not well taken. For if the paragraph is looked to, it will be seen that all of these items are cognate and kindred matters, because they all relate to the instruction of the Indians in industrial matters, one in the farming industry, another in the care of standing timber, some in one line, and some in another; but the aggregate of the items relates to industrial instruction. The care of forests, the preparation of lumber for the market, and instruction in domestic science, about which the gentlemen from Kentucky inquired, are all properly related to one head. It is instruction in practical matters that will tend to make the Indians self-supporting. Now if the criticism that has been directed toward this paragraph would take any concrete shape, it would be in the direction of an effort to segregate the items of which complaint is made. The items ought to be segregated, and by an amendment, a limitation of expenditure imposed on each item.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say to the gentleman that, speaking for myself, unless they are segregated I shall make the point of order; and in order to indicate how I think they ought to be segregated I would say that after the word "process," in line 2, page 7, there ought to be "$5,000;" after the word "Wisconsin," in line 8, there ought to be "$20,000;" after the word "necessary," in line 12, there ought to be "$30,000;" and after the word "dollars," in line 18, "$120,000."

Mr. SAUNDERS. Now, if the gentleman proposes to make a working proposition by his suggestion, I would like to know how he figures out the amount of his limitation of expenditure with respect to each item? How does he get the information by which he imposes the limitation in each case and ascertains the same to be the proper amount for that item?

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman want an answer?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Why, yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Those were the amounts last year, and the estimates for this year.

Mr. SAUNDERS. But that does not give me any information as to why the limitations of expenditure proposed by the gentleman are proper to be imposed in each case. Why should the department be limited to $5,000 in one case and $20,000 in another, when the prospective work is an expansion of existing work, and therefore calls for greater expenditures?

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman suggest wherein they are wrong?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes; I will suggest it if you give me an opportunity.

Mr. SHERLEY. Go ahead.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The very reason why we were indisposed in the committee to put these specific limitations upon these respective items of expenditure was this: In the work of the Indian Department, as in the case of the other departments, the House must bear in mind that something must always be left to the discretion and judgment of the department. You can not impose any duty upon this department without presuming, at least, in that connection that the duty is going to be wisely and advisedly discharged. It is fairly due to the department that we should anticipate that the work which it is to do will be properly conducted with reference to the money which it is to expend. One item may require $6,000, instead of $5,000, as suggested by the gentleman.

Another item may require $75,000 instead of $70,000, and so on, all the way through, the expenditure required being in some instances more and in others less than might be anticipated. Hence we thought that the best way to carry out the main object that we had in view, namely, the uplift of the Indian, and the instruction of the Indians, along lines that would be most beneficial to them, would be not to restrict the department in its expenditure with reference to each individual item, but to give them a moderate amount to be expended in their judgment on all of the items. This suggestion of restriction proffered by the gentleman from Kentucky is unwise, injudicious, and not in the interest of good government, as he seems to think. Take, for instance, these items: "For the purpose of protecting growing timber on Indian reservations," "For the purpose of removing the dead timber." Are you going to segregate them, and provide so much for live timber and the care of it, and so much for removing and marketing dead timber? You can not, Mr. Chairman, work out this scheme in any such way as that, so as to subserve the interests of the Indians.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman does not think for a moment that that is a fair answer to the criticism that has been made as to the segregation of the items, that it is like the question he presents, of so much for fallen timber, and so much for standing timber?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I think it is precisely in point. I think it is just as appropriate an application of the principle for which you stand as the segregation which you suggest.

Mr. SHERLEY. If that is what the gentleman thinks, I am willing to let the House pass on it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Let the House pass upon it. The illustration given by me was intended to show that the gentleman's suggestion was not a workable one.

Now, as I have said, when we look to these items, we find that they are properly grouped as kindred, and cognate matters.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman allow an interruption there?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman contend that the segregation of the items, carried in the present law, is not workable?

Mr. SAUNDERS. The very thing that was suggested to us was, that it was in the interest of working out the best results for the Indians, not to impose a limitation of expenditure on each item.

Mr. STAFFORD. What department official in the hearings, or in the report, has taken any such position?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Everything that is called to the attention of a committee, does not necessarily appear in the printed hearings, as we all know. The work with the Indians is all more, or less experimental. You may call this riding hobbies, if you please, but it is an earnest, and an honest effort to get at the very best way of dealing with this situation. The attitude of the department in respect to schemes for the uplift of the Indians, is entirely eclectic.

The House will recollect that last year, with respect to the Menominee Reservation, which is excepted in this bill, we adopted an experimental plan for the Indians on that reservation. We provided for the cutting up of their dead timber, and that the Indians should be employed in connection with that work. That scheme for this reservation was submitted to this House last year, as an experimental proposition, but one which we thought would be justified in the result. So with respect to these matters. It was suggested to us that by grouping the items, you might utilize what was left over if anything from one object, in carrying out another. What objection is there to that? The amount that is appropriated by this section is relatively so small an amount, that I think this House may safely leave it to the Indian Department, to conduct this series of hobbies, if you choose to designate this work as hobbies, so as to promote the best interests of the Indians.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. In the current law is a provision for testing the possibilities of soils and climate in reference to certain products of the earth. That is now limited to experimenting with those things that have not been hitherto raised in the neighborhood of these reservations. That limitation being removed in the present bill, if that were enacted into law would there be anything to prevent the department from spending a large sum of money in that one experiment?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Not a thing in the world; and as that is one of the most expanding forms of agricultural inquiry, there is no reason why the department should be limited to the precise sum carried in the current law.

Mr. MANN. That may be; but does the gentleman think that is any reason why Congress should not know whether they are going to do it or not? Should we not know whether we are going to appropriate money for that purpose or some other purpose?

Mr. SAUNDERS. You know the purposes in the aggregate for which you are appropriating, because they are given in the language of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I want some idea of how much we are appropriating. I take it there is no relationship between testing vegetables on a piece of ground and cutting fallen timber. When we make an appropriation covering both items do you not think we ought to have some information as to the amount that is necessary for the one and the amount necessary for the other?

Mr. SAUNDERS. My answer to that is just this: What useful purpose whatever would it serve for this House to provide that for the conduct of experiments on Indian school, or agency farms, designed to test the possibilities of soil, and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables and fruits, using Indian labor in the process, a limitation of $10,000, or $5,000 should be imposed? Whether it was $10,000, or $5,000, we would have to leave the expenditure to the wise discretion of the department.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that the House ought to have any idea what it is appropriating money for?

Mr. SAUNDERS. We know that in the aggregate for this great collection of useful purposes, there is a limit of $250,000. That is not so much, that it will shock any Member of this House with the idea that the Indian Department will run riot in waste and extravagance, in connection with its expenditure.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that in making appropriations the House properly ought to have some conception as to whether $5,000 is to be appropriated for the purpose of making these experimental tests, or whether it is to be $250,000 for that purpose?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Well, as I said before, Mr. Chairman, that brings us back to this proposition, that when you are conducting what is confessedly, experimental work, you must, in a measure, turn over its administration to the good sense, and judgment of the department to which it belongs. When there are a number of kindred subjects, which will be investigated, and looked after, by that department, we may well leave to the judgment of that department, the particular amounts to be applied to each subject, and we ought to believe that the department will use good judgment, in connection with the application of the funds. I have that much confidence in the administration of the Indian Department, to believe that this will be done in this instance.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman relies wholly upon the good judgment of the department, and considers that we ought to have nothing to say about it then.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I would say that if the Indian Department should come to me and state that it wanted a reasonable amount for a group of confessedly meritorious objects, I would not consider that I would be acting very wisely by imposing a limit of expenditure for each member of the group; that is, when the aggregate of expenditure was a moderate one. I do not believe we are promoting economy at all by that sort of business.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will state that another reason for putting these appropriations together was that some of the work contemplated here, for instance, the item for looking after the forests, could be attended to by a man who is employed as a farmer, and that we could save something in labor instead of having a man employed from one appropriation to look after the timber and then having another man employed to look after the farms.

Mr. SAUNDERS. What the chairman has said in that connection is just one of those details of administration that I refer to, and it illustrates how, in the administration of this experimental work, this hobby work, if you choose to call it so, a department that had some discretion in the expenditure of public money, as between the different items, might so expend it on the objects committed to its administration as to best subserve the public interest.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is there any reason in the world why they could not have the man do the two forms of work if the items were segregated?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly; because the limitation of expenditure might be a stumbling-block. I know, of course, the idea that these gentlemen are undertaking to convey by these questions is that it is not in the interest of good government and economy to group these little items.

I am as much opposed to extravagance as any Member of this House, and if it were some large thing with respect to which a limitation would be useful I would be glad to have it imposed, but when you take the class of work that is being done here, work in the forest, in the home, and on the experimental farm, and the department assures you that they can best subserve the public interest and the interest of the Indians by being allowed to use this $250,000 in the manner indicated in the bill, I say it is too small a matter for us to be higgling over, by undertaking to limit the expenditure to $5,000 on one item, or $20,000 on another, and so on. In my judgment, by doing this, we will merely hamper the usefulness of the department in respect to the expenditure of this money. That is all I wish to say, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that there was a point of order reserved against this paragraph. Does the gentleman who made the point of order insist upon it?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before that is disposed of, may I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question which I asked him a while ago and which he failed to answer at that time for some good reason? That is, as to why the provision is left out of the bill "not hitherto raised in those neighborhoods," as relating to these experimental tests. I may say to the gentleman that when this item first appeared in the Indian appropriation bill a few years ago, it was expressly stated it was for the purpose of testing new trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits in localities where they had not hitherto been raised, and it was at my suggestion upon that statement that there was added the provision that is now left out, it being then stated that that would be perfectly satisfactory; that all they wanted to do was to try new things. Now, there may be reasons for the elimination of it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not know of any reason except that the language would be surplusage. I do not see that it adds anything to it. If I understand the question, it is why these three or four words were left out, namely, "to be grown elsewhere than in the locality."

Mr. MANN. No; the question is whether they can test trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits commonly grown in the neighborhood. The provision left out was that they might test these products when not hitherto raised in the neighborhood.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is that a very material matter?

Mr. MANN. It is a matter of material importance, although I would not undertake to say that it ought to be retained in the bill. Of course it really limits the test to new things. It may be that they ought to be permitted to go ahead and test without that limitation, but here there is nothing to confine them to a test, because anything that the farmer plants is realy a test.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The farmer is always testing when he plants.

Mr. MANN. When the farmer plants any product or seed at any time he is not testing the soil and the climate.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Does not the farmer test the time of planting, the manner of planting, the growth, whether it is a success or not when planted in this way or when planted in that way? They make such a test whether the products have been previously grown or not.

Mr. MANN. I predicted that when this authority was granted to the department they would want to enlarge it and commence farming on a large scale, and that they would want a large sum of money, and now here is an appropriation, not designed by the committee to be used for that purpose, but with power on the part of the department to use a very much larger sum of money than the $5,000. It may be that they ought to have more money, I do not know.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman thinks that this should be confined absolutely to new things?

Mr. MANN. I do not undertake to say whether it should be confined absolutely to new things or not, that is, new in the sense of not having been raised last year. I do undertake to say that it would be folly to test the soil and climate as to raising corn in central Illinois or wheat in Dakota.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The original idea of the seed distribution was to distribute only new seed, but now they send out the commonest seeds that are grown.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to imitate that in this bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will say that, practically, if you plant an elm tree this year you would not be permitted to plant another elm tree the next year.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it would apply to elm trees.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It applies to trees and grains and other things of that sort. It would work out in that way; it would prohibit anything that was not absolutely novel.

Mr. MANN. I do not want to see the Government start Indian farms without knowing it. If the Government wants to engage in this farming on a large scale, let it say so. We have already discovered before this that when the department has authority to do a thing and gets involved we back it up in the end, because there is nothing else for us to do.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. And I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOUTELL in the chair). The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kentucky on the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. The point of order is that the appropriations are not warranted by law, and that the language of the proviso is a change of existing law. The proviso clearly changes existing law, and I do not know of any law that authorizes the conducting of experiments on Indian school agency farms designed to test the soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruit, using Indian labor in the process. I would like to have the law stated that warrants that item.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The proviso.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; the proviso is clearly contrary to existing law, but what authorizes these experiments?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Why, it is authorized, Mr. Chairman, by the section of the Revised Statutes to which I referred, section 2071.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does that refer to the use of Indian labor?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not know that I understand exactly the gentleman's inquiry. Do you apply it to one particular——

Mr. SHERLEY. I am taking them up in order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What is the first one?

Mr. SHERLEY. The first is the authority to conduct experiments to test the possibilities of soil and climate, using Indian labor in the process.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Why, Mr. Chairman, we have a statute that requires the employment of Indian labor wherever it is possible to employ it, and gives it the preference. We have any number of laws authorizing the existence of Indian schools upon which there is conducted a farm, and in some instances schools with a very large farm, and all lines of agriculture are conducted on those farms, authorized by law.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman cite the law? Of course I can not answer a general statement of that kind.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Section 2069 requires that preference shall be given to persons of Indian descent in the case of employment of persons for the benefit of Indians. That is in the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, where is your authorization to make tests of soils and so forth?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think that comes properly under the authority of the appropriations to be used for agricultural purposes. It seems to me that an examination of the soil has much to do with agriculture. I will state further, as to the proviso, that in the act of March 1, 1909 (35 Stat. L., 786), is found this language:

To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to employ practical farmers and practical stockmen, subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, in addition to the agency and school farmers now employed, at wages not exceeding $75 each per month, to superintend and direct farming and stock raising among such Indians as are making effort for self-support, $125,000: Provided, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may use not exceeding $25,000 of the said amount in the employment of additional clerical assistance at such agencies and schools as may be necessary in connection with the leasing and appraisal of Indian lands and for sundry purposes: Provided further, That the amounts paid such farmers and stockmen shall not come within the limit for employees fixed by the act of June 7, 1897.

Now, I think, Mr. Chairman, that is the law now. It does not seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that there is anything in this section which could be subject to the point of order unless it be the growing of trees, and it seems to me that comes within the scope of the authority in relation to agriculture, the conducting of experiments in the cultivating of crops, or the raising of shrubbery or trees.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I had a little rather myself that the items were not subject to the point of order and that the House voted upon the proposition whether it would segregate these items. I do not see how there is any possibility about the paragraph not being subject to the point of order. Most of these items of this character in every appropriation are really subject to a point of order. Of course this item has certain provisions in it, just as in lines 13 and 14, in relation to the employment of farmers—

Subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

That is legislative and is clearly subject to the point of order. The proviso, of course, is a legislative provision and is subject to the point of order, and to that extent necessarily repeals the existing statute. There is no authority in law for these tests of the possibilities of soil and climate, cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits, using Indian labor in the process, nor does the statute provide that Indian labor shall be used. It provides that in certain cases labor of Indian descent shall be given the preference. Nor is there any authority in law for the appropriation to preserve living and growing timber on Indian reservations, though I think that ought to be appropriated for. I do not see how there is any question about the point of order. Of course the question as to the employment of suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian women housekeeping and other household duties, so far as I know, there is no provision of law authorizing any such education to be extended to Indians unless it be by treaty provisions, and this, of course, is not limited to treaty provisions.

Also, as to the employment of practical farmers to superintend and direct farming and stock raising among Indians. I recall no provision of law which authorizes this, although it may be a very desirable thing to do.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yield to his colleague from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER]?

Mr. MANN. I do.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Teaching the Indian men stock raising and the women folks housekeeping would be along the line of educating the Indians, would it not?

Mr. MANN. It is not along the line of education. Education is a different term. It is a form of education, but it is not covered by the term "education" in the statutes.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Does the law fix the time an Indian is supposed to be no longer subject to this or the time that he shall be educated? I mean the age.

Mr. MANN. I think the law provides practically for the maintenance of Indian schools. But that is another proposition, and is covered, of course. This is not an Indian school, and it is not a matter of education. This is for the purpose of directing farming and stock raising, not educating Indians—not educating Indians to raise crops, but employing men to direct stock raising among the Indians.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I suppose it was done for the purpose of educating Indian farmers how to manage stock and how to properly raise it.

Mr. MANN. That will be a very laudable purpose. It may be that that is the case. I suppose they might educate Indians how to ride bicycles and use flying machines, yet I dare say that would not be covered in the act providing for the education of Indians.

Mr. MORSE. In Wisconsin one of the branches taught in the common schools is agriculture. Here on the Indian reservations the farmer who teaches agriculture lives at the school. Take, for example, one of the reservations in my district. The children are brought together from all parts of the district, and the farm is maintained right there at the school, and the farmer takes the boys out and teaches them the art of gardening. The boys do the milking. They set out the trees. The girls are taught to make butter. The fact is that this is the most valuable part of the education of those pupils, and is directly in line with the provision of the law which permits the appropriation of money for the education of the Indians.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The teaching of farming and of domestic science is not confined to Indians that are past 21 years of age?

Mr. MORSE. Certainly not.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. And this provision of the law would not relate to the education of Indians that had arrived at the age of manhood and womanhood?

Mr. MORSE. Decidedly not. Now, there is at the school about 150 boys and girls, young men and young women, and they are taught farming and taught domestic science, and there is no reason in the world why this appropriation is not sustained by the law which gives us the right to appropriate money for the education of the children.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORSE. With pleasure.

Mr. GOULDEN. Are these instructions of which you speak of a practical character?

Mr. MORSE. They are of a practical character. They are given both in the schoolroom and out on the farm which adjoins the school.

Mr. GOULDEN. What has been the experience as to those schools when the children go back to their homes?

Mr. MORSE. In many cases successful. If they had better farmers they would be more successful than they are.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the law read by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs is not permanent law. It was a compilation made from certain provisions carried in appropriation bills for particular years, and it can not be made the basis of law for subsequent appropriations. Now, if you examine these provisions from which the compilation was made, you will see they are as follows—I read from the Thirty-fifth Statutes at Large, page 75:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian girls in housekeeping and other household duties, at a rate not to exceed $60 per month, and for furnishing necessary equipments and renting quarters where necessary, $30,000: Provided, That the amount paid said matrons shall not come within the limit for employees fixed by the act of June 7, 1897.

Then, there is a provision as to farmers and stockmen; but they are simply provisions in the appropriation bill of that year, and do not create law, except for that year, and were subject at the time to the point of order. Then, I find in the second supplement, page 953, this language, that was read as authorizing the paragraph:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ practical farmers and practical stockmen in addition to the agency farmers now employed, at wages not exceeding $65 each per month, to superintend and direct farming and stock raising among such Indians as are making effort for self-support, $65,000.

Again, simply an item in the appropriation bill. Then, I call the Chair's attention to the further fact that the language in the present bill is not even the same as the language carried in these two appropriation bills, and clearly the proviso changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he has had his attention called to the provision of the law of 1909, section 5326, which provides:

SEC. 5326. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is authorized to employ, in addition to agency farmers, practical farmers and practical stockmen, subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, at wages not exceeding $75 per month, to superintend and direct farming and stock raising among such Indians as are making effort for self-support; but practicable, competent Indians shall be given preference in such employment: Provided, That the amounts paid said farmers and stockmen shall not be included within the limitation on salaries and compensation of employees contained in section 5330.

Provided further, That said commissioner may also employ farmers at any Indian school at not exceeding $60 per month, subject only to such examination as to qualification as said Secretary may prescribe.

Also:

SEC. 5327. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to employ suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian girls housekeeping and other household duties, at a compensation not to exceed $60 per month: Provided, That the amounts paid said matrons shall not be included within the limitation on salaries and compensation of employees contained in section 5330.

Mr. SHERLEY. May I ask what the Chair is reading from?

The CHAIRMAN. This is a compilation of the laws.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am afraid the Chairman is reading from a compilation of the laws pending before the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

The CHAIRMAN. It is entitled "1909."

Mr. SHERLEY. That was simply pending before the Committee on Revision of the Laws; and if the Chair will look at the margin, he will see the reference to the laws the compilers think warrant these provisions. I took the trouble to look up the references to the provisions which have just been read, and in each instance they were simply appropriation bills carrying a warrant for the expenditure of a certain amount of money for the purpose enumerated, but not creating any permanent law.

The CHAIRMAN. That was what the Chair wished to be advised upon.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is the fact, as I have ascertained by examination.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Of course, Mr. Chairman, doubtless the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky is correct, that these are made in the appropriation bills. I think it is equally true, however, that all this in italics is understood to be the existing law.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I am peculiarly familiar with the work of the compilers, because it has been before me in my committee. What they undertook to do is to carry the provisions that they thought ought to be general law in the form that they think they should be in, and to give a reference in the margin to such provisions. When you look at the particular reference you find they are frequently simply appropriation bills carrying money for the current year and not law in the sense that we speak of on a point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman is certainly better posted on that subject than any gentleman in the House, and I would like to ask him to inform the House as to the distinction between the ordinary type and the items in italics.

Mr. SHERLEY. The items in italics, speaking from memory, are those having simply the basis of the recommendation of the commission, and not based on existing law, other than an appropriation bill, or in a general law.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I think the suggestion, perhaps, is not entirely borne out by the facts, because I notice the particular section under consideration, the part in italics appears to be in an appropriation bill also. If the Chair will indulge me for a moment, it seems to me, on this point of order, if the Chair cares to listen to me, it is entirely too narrow for application to the point urged upon the attention of the Chair.

The truth is that the relation between the Government and the President as head of the executive department is well sustained by the law as defined in the courts in a long series of decisions extending throughout the history of the country from the beginning; the relation between the Government and the Indian is that of guardian and ward.

And you will find repeated expressions through the statutes and decisions recognizing that relation. Now, we proceed to make appropriations based upon that theory. The Lonewolf case, which I think is found in One hundred and sixty-eighth United States, is a plain announcement of that doctrine.

Now, if there is the relation of guardian and ward between the Government and the Indian tribes, some one on behalf of the Government represents the executive end of it; and, as I have already stated, that executive head is commonly accepted and recognized to be the President of the United States.

As my colleague has already reminded the Chair, as far back as 1830, in what now appears as section 2114 of the Revised Statutes, the President is authorized to exercise general superintendence and care over certain Indian tribes that were at that time being removed, as I understand, from east of the Mississippi to the vast reservations of the West; but the care that he is there recognized to exercise is simply the same as he was theretofore authorized to exercise generally toward those Indian tribes before they were removed to the west of the Mississippi River.

In section 2071 of the Revised Statutes, which is permanent law and to which the attention of the Chair has been called briefly already by my colleague, the language there is very broad, as covering the whole subject of an authority for education in agriculture, and that is a broad subject. By the language of that section authority is given for the employment of capable persons to instruct Indians in the mode of agriculture; for teaching their children in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and performing such other duties as may be enjoined, according to such instructions and rules as the President may give and prescribe for the regulation of their conduct in the discharge of their duty.

That would seem to be specific authority broad enough for the numerous provisions here regarding the employment of instructors—farmers, stockmen, and others—to instruct the children in domestic employment, and throughout the entire list.

Now, it seems to me that that specific language would be broad enough to cover all of the several provisions of this section unless it be for the purpose of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations, removing dead timber, and so forth, pertaining to the preservation of the Indian's property in the forests.

I urge upon the attention of the Chair whether section 2114 of the Revised Statutes does not recognize in the President an authority broad enough to superintend and care generally for these Indian tribes? If it does, certainly the superintendence and care of the Indian tribes can properly include within that authority the care of the Indian's property, its proper preservation for the use of himself and of his descendants; and certainly nothing more than that is contemplated in this provision for the preservation of the forests and the proper disposition of the dead timber. In other words, it is to care for his material well-being, while the other portions of this section aim particularly at his intellectual and moral well-being, at least, in part. I think therefore——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman differentiate between caring for forests under that section of the Revised Statutes and caring for the health of the Indians?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Why, certainly. Anyone would differentiate between those two propositions.

Mr. MANN. Under that provision of the statute?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I do not quite understand the suggestion.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says that under that provision of the statute the President has very broad powers.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MANN. To do a great many things. Does the gentleman contend that under that provision of the statute he can cure, or cause to be cured, cases of trachoma in Indians?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I do, sir.

Mr. MANN. Well, but the trouble with the gentleman's position is that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole who was in the chair yesterday decided that it did not apply, and that is a very recent ruling of the Chair.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. And still that same item in substance went in this morning, after the statement by the chairman of the committee that since the adjournment yesterday the subject had been investigated, and he considered that section 2071 did cover the subject, and it is in the bill now.

Mr. MANN. I claim it does not cover the subject. If the mere fact that an amendment goes in when a point of order is withdrawn is taken to be the conceding of a parliamentary point, we will not dare risk anything of that sort in the future.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Of course, it went in this morning without objection; at the same time I think the subject is proper for the consideration of the Chair now.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly, but it was ruled upon by the then occupant of the chair yesterday, and that is a pretty recent ruling.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It may be an authority, but it is possible that the Chair might change his ruling. I urge this point on the present occupant of the chair, and I should have urged it upon the former occupant of the chair, but this subject was not discussed last evening before the committee. I think it might be said that if this authority exists in the President to superintend and care for the Indian tribes it would cover both of these subjects.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The only provision in the statute to which the attention of the Chair has been called upon which this paragraph can be based is section 2071 of the Revised Statutes, and the only part of that section under which this authority can be evoked is in the words "to instruct them in the mode of agriculture suited to their station."

While the present occupant of the chair would be inclined to give a very broad construction to the language of the statute, so far as applying to the employment of farmers and stockmen, and even in dealing with the forests, there is one provision in this paragraph which the Chair does not think contemplates it or could be brought within the language of this section.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Do I understand the Chair to indicate that the proviso is the part which, in his judgment, makes it subject to a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair had not concluded the sentence. The portion of the paragraph which the Chair was about to state which is subject to a point of order is the part beginning in line 5, "and to conduct such timber operations and sales of timber as may be deemed advisable."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As provided by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair can not determine from that language whether it might be operations and sales, both advisable and provided by law, or whether such operations and sales as may be deemed advisable only.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I may say to the Chair that I am quite certain that we have a law authorizing the sale of timber on certain reservations, and making the Indian Bureau the administrative office to enforce the administration of that law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to see that statute.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like an opportunity of looking that up. If that is the only question other than the proviso, we can probably adjust this very easily. In order that there may be an opportunity to look up the law, I will ask to pass the item without prejudice and we will return to it later.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would hold both the proviso and the paragraph in relation to the timber operation, so far as the Chair is at present informed, as subject to the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I ask that we pass the item without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the paragraph will be passed with the point of order pending against it.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of goods and supplies for the Indian service, including inspection, pay of necessary employees, and all other expenses connected therewith, including advertising, telegraphing, telephoning, and the transportation of Indian goods and supplies, $300,000: Provided, That hereafter the purchase of Indian supplies shall be made in conformity with the requirements of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against lines 3, 4, 5, and 6 on page 8.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve a point of order against the whole paragraph.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am willing to reserve the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss the proposition in the proviso contained in lines 3 to 6 on page 8. This was put in there to simply require the same regulation in regard to the purchase of property that applies to other departments of the Government. It was suggested by the committee, without any conference whatever with anyone on the part of the department. It was believed to be in the interest of good administration, and if any gentleman on the floor of the House desires to make a point of order in order to have the law as at present still continue, which, in the judgment of the committee, makes it easier to avoid the law, I have nothing whatever to say.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, as far as the discussion of the merits of the proposition is concerned, we may have a word to say about that.

I was merely addressing myself to the point of order, and I make it for the reason that here is a declaration of Congress which changes existing law, which has no place on an appropriation bill. I propose to offer an amendment to take the place of this section, after the point of order has been disposed of.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will ask the gentleman if this does change existing law?

Provided, That hereafter the purchase of Indian supplies shall be made in conformity with the requirements of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

As a matter of fact, it conforms to the law already in existence, and the gentleman's point of order is that it does not conform to the law, but creates new law.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. My point of order is that it is new legislation. We are operating now under a law which establishes warehouses in different sections of the country.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It simply points out the existing law that this act shall conform to.

Mr. NORRIS. These purchases were not made with regard to that law prior to this.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They should have been.

Mr. NORRIS. No; there was a special law applying to them.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There is a point of order pending, as I understood it, made by the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. KAHN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. Mr. Chairman, this very question was discussed in Congress on April 15, 1880. The general law was before the House at that time, and with that information before the House a special provision was inserted in the Indian appropriation bill, which has been carried from one act to the other up to the present time. That special provision is the existing law. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, for whom I have a great deal of regard, says that it will be better administration if the general law be invoked rather than the special law. I desire to call to the attention of the Chair and to the committee the fact that the special law was inserted in the bill especially for the purpose of securing better administration with respect to Indian affairs than prevailed at that time. Mr. Cox, a Member of this House from the State of New York, stated upon this floor that under the general law the method of letting contracts for Indian supplies was a disgrace to the country. It was debated by Mr. Ryan, of Kansas, and a number of other gentlemen, and they all agreed that in the Indian Service this special law would be infinitely better than the general law. And now, after all these years, to go back to the general law, in my judgment, would be to take a step backward and not forward. The statement of the chairman of the committee that it is in the interest of good administration is, in my judgment, entirely unfounded.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman kindly point out to the committee wherein it is advisable to have a special law covering contracts in the Indian affairs differing from that prevailing in the other departments of the Government?

Mr. KAHN. I call to the attention of the committee the very fact——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Oh, we do not want to know what they said thirty years ago, or what the conditions then were. We want to know what they are now.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is a member of the committee, and he should know what the conditions are.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am perfectly willing to state my views of them, but I want to hear the gentleman's idea.

Mr. KAHN. At the present time advertisements are inserted in newspapers in various parts of the country for supplying the Indians of this country with provisions. Under the general law those advertisements were inserted in a few newspapers of this country. Frequently supplies were purchased in New York or in Washington that were produced right at the threshold of the Indian reservation. The goods that were purchased in the East had paid the freight to this section of the country and were then shipped back again clean across the country to the reservations, or if that was not done the successful bidder put in his tender with that enhanced value of the commodity by reason of the cost of freight in mind, and then went out West and purchased in the markets near the Indian reservations and thus made an increased profit for himself. It was in order to avoid that very condition of affairs that this law was changed; a change, in my judgment, for the benefit of the country.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, as I stated before, I have no desire to discuss this question. The committee thought that there was no reason why there should be a special law for one class of the Government different from the other departments, and I may say to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] that the special law upon this subject is indefensible. Now, it appears that under the law that applies to the Indian Service purchases up to the amount of $500 can be made without advertising at all, whereas under the general law there can not be any amount purchased without first advertising, except in case of emergency.

Mr. PARSONS. What is the limitation—will the gentleman yield——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In just a moment.

Mr. PARSONS. Is there any limitation as to the amount in the general law?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not in the general law; but in the special law there is aimed to be a limitation in the case of exigency to $3,000; but in actual practice it is not a limitation at all when necessity, apparent or real, requires its circumvention. Purchases in multiples of $3,000 may be made without end. This law has been in operation several years, and we know what the working effect of it is. It appears that there have been instances where there have been purchases of $500, which may be made without advertising, until it amounted to a considerable sum by simply multiplying purchases within $500.

But we have no pride of opinion about it; and if the point of order is insisted upon and it goes out, this law will continue as it has existed in years past.

Mr. PARSONS. What excuse did the Indian Bureau give for making purchases in $500 lots?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There was no suggestion, Mr. Chairman, that under the present administration of the Indian

Office there had been any such abuse, consequently we had nothing to find fault with, so far as the present administration is concerned, but we found it has been done, and done frequently——

Mr. HAYES. Will the gentleman state, if he can, what provision has been made for the distribution of these supplies to the Indians in the various sections of the country?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is another subject we will discuss in just a moment, I apprehend, after this question is disposed of.

I offer copies of the special law relating to the purchase of Indian supplies and the general law applicable to all other branches of the public service, to be printed in the RECORD.

The existing law relating to the purchase of Indian supplies is peculiar to that service alone, and is as follows:

That no purchase of supplies for which appropriations are herein or hereinafter made for the Indian Service, exceeding in the aggregate $500 in value at any one time, shall be made without first giving at least three weeks' public notice by advertisement, except in case of exigency, when, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall make official record of the facts constituting the exigency, and shall report the same to Congress at its next session, he may direct that purchases may be made in open market in amount not exceeding $3,000 at any one purchase: Provided, That hereafter supplies may be purchased, contracts let, and labor employed for the construction of artesian wells, ditches, and other works for irrigation, not to exceed the sum of $5,000 in any one purchase or contract, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, without advertising as hereinbefore provided: Provided further, That as far as practicable Indian labor shall be employed and purchase in the open market made from Indians, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. (Act of Apr. 30, 1908, 35 Stat., 71.)

The general law on the subject of the purchase of supplies is embodied in section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

All purchases and contracts for supplies or services, in any of the departments of the Government, except for personal services, shall be made by advertising a sufficient time previously for proposals respecting the same, when the public exigencies do not require the immediate delivery of the articles or performance of the service. When immediate delivery or performance is required by the public exigency, the articles or service required may be procured by open purchase or contract, at the place and in the manner in which such articles are usually bought and sold, or such services engaged, between individuals.

The effect of this special law for the Indian Service is to permit the purchase of supplies under the amount of $500 without advertising. It operates in practice to permit the purchase of supplies in much larger amounts by dividing the orders into amounts of $500 or less.

This act also provides that purchases amounting to more than $500 must be advertised for "at least three weeks." The general law provides that advertising for all supplies must be made "a sufficient time."

The special law relating to the Indian Service aims to limit exigency purchases to $3,000. In practice, there is no limitation whatever, as $3,000 purchases may be multiplied indefinitely.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. This proviso is:

That hereafter the purchase of Indian supplies shall be made in conformity with the requirements of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Section 3709 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

All purchases and contracts for supplies or services in any department of the Government shall be made—

And so forth.

Now, the Chair finds that there have since been passed certain acts of Congress found in the Statutes at Large, volumes 17, 18, and 19, relating to the purchases of supplies, and so forth, in the Indian Department, making special provisions for that department, and that is what the gentlemen meant, the Chair understands, when they referred to the special law. Now, this proviso clearly would repeal or change these so-called "special laws" and make the purchases subject to the requirements of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, thereby changing existing law. The Chair must, therefore, hold that the proviso is in violation of the rule of the House prohibiting any change of law upon a general appropriation bill. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have a committee amendment to offer. After the word "dollars," in line 2, on page 8, insert:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the payment of rent of warehouses at New York, Chicago, Omaha, St. Louis, and San Francisco—

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the Chair's attention to the fact that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] had reserved a point of order as to the entire paragraph, and unless that is withdrawn it ought to be disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand any point of order was made by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I reserved the point of order, Mr. Chairman, but I think, in view of this amendment, which I did not hear distinctly, I will withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I can repeat the amendment, I have it here, and will send it to the desk in a moment, but it is:

After the word "dollars," at the end of line 2, page 8, insert:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay for rent of warehouses at New York, Chicago, St. Louis, Omaha, or San Francisco, unless the Secretary of the Interior shall deem it advisable to maintain warehouses at such places or any of them."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska makes the point of order against the amendment, and the gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The point of order is that two years ago in the appropriation bill for Indian affairs the following proviso was inserted:

Provided, That hereafter warehouses for the receipt, storage, and shipment of goods for the Indian Service shall be maintained at the following places: New York, Chicago, Omaha, St. Louis, and San Francisco.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a plain attempt to nullify that provision for the maintenance and support of Indian warehouses at those five cities.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The latter part of the amendment, Mr. Chairman, is clearly subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think, Mr. Chairman, it is clearly a limitation upon the appropriation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the latter part of the amendment—I do not have it before me and can not quote the words—the discretionary portion of it, that gives to the Secretary a certain discretion, certainly makes the amendment subject to a point of order. It seems to me it will be a limitation if it were not for that discretionary power that the amendment undertakes to give, but having that in makes it subject to a point of order, it seems to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The act of Congress approved April 30, 1908, provides:

That hereafter warehouses for the receipt, storage, and shipment of goods for the Indian Service shall be maintained at the following places: New York, Chicago, Omaha, St. Louis, and San Francisco.

That, although appearing in an appropriation bill, was legislation, and permanent legislation, until repealed or altered by act of Congress. The declaration of the statute that they shall be maintained at those places authorizes an appropriation, but is ineffective without one. Congress can either appropriate or withhold an appropriation. This proviso, so far as it reads, thus—would, in the opinion of the Chair, be a pure limitation upon the appropriation. The rule, however, provides against changing existing law upon an appropriation bill. These additional words—unless the Secretary of the Interior shall deem is advisable to maintain warehouses at said places or at any of them—

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay for rent of warehouses at New York, Chicago, St. Louis, Omaha, or San Francisco—

vest in the Secretary a discretion which he does not have under the existing law. To that extent it changes existing law. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to strike out the latter part.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, the gentleman from South Dakota offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 2, after the word "dollars," insert:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay for the rent of warehouses at New York, Chicago, St. Louis, Omaha, or San Francisco."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is in order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers a substitute amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7 strike out lines 22, 23, and 24, and on page 8 strike out lines 1 to 6 and insert in lieu thereof the following:
"Telegraphing, telephoning, and purchase of Indian supplies: To pay the expense of purchasing goods and supplies for the Indian Service, including inspection, pay of necessary employees, and all other expenses connected therewith; advertising, at rates not exceeding regular commercial rates; telegraphing and telephoning; and transporting Indian goods and supplies, including expenses of transportation agents and rent of warehouses, $315,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Missouri that that seems to be a substitute for the entire paragraph.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be first in order to vote upon any amendment perfecting the paragraph. The question therefore is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment proposed by the chairman of the committee.

This is a matter which has been time and time again fought out on the floor of this House, and this House has invariably determined that the maintenance of five warehouses for the receipt, containing, and distribution of the two or three million dollars of Indian goods was a desirable thing. Two years ago this matter was so strongly impressed upon the House that the appropriation bill of that year which has been read from the desk provided as permanent law that these warehouses should hereafter be maintained in these five great centers. No question has ever been raised that these places are appropriate centers in which to buy goods and from which to distribute goods. The expense of maintaining these warehouses is not great. The total item provided in the estimates heretofore for the maintenance of these six warehouses is something like $60,000, of which, I think, about $6,000 are expended in the city of Omaha for salaries, rent, and general cost of distribution.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How much is the total rent amount? Has the gentleman figures on that?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; I think I have the figures for the rent. The total item in five cities for rent is $13,263.

Mr. COX of Indiana. For a year?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. For a year. Light and fuel in these five warehouses, $650; total regular salaries for the employees in these five warehouses, $35,400, and extra pay for work, $4,373. Then for miscellaneous expenses, $4,284 a year, a total for the six warehouses of $57,036.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Would it not be in the interest of economy to abandon the warehouses?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not think so. In proof of that, I state to the House the fact that this appropriation bill in this paragraph in question only makes a reduction of $15,000, and makes an appropriation for purposes of telegraph, telephone, and all other matters, $300,000, instead of $315,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. May I interrupt the gentleman just with a suggestion?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I say, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Nebraska, that since this bill was reported we have obtained information by which we find we can still further reduce this appropriation; and I have an amendment that I shall offer if this amendment prevails, reducing the amount $20,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is possible that is true, Mr. Chairman, although my opinion is that it is mere guesswork. This item in the past has been reduced; it was reduced from $325,000 to $315,000, and I suppose in course of time it will be reduced some more. The fact is that the maintenance of these five warehouses carried in this paragraph is a desirable thing. In the first place it creates five distinct and separate markets in which the Government of the United States can ask for bids. The Government has been operating under a section of the statutes which was quoted a few days ago by the chairman of this committee, which provides—

That no purchase of supplies for which appropriations are herein made, exceeding in the aggregate $500 in value at any one time, shall be made without first giving at least three weeks public notice by advertisement, except in case of exigency, when, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall make official record of the facts constituting the exigency, and shall report the same to Congress at its next session, he may direct that purchase may be made in open market in amount not exceeding $3,000 at any one purchase.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I undertake to say that it is not going to be possible for the Government of the United States to buy two or three million dollars' worth of goods for these Indians without having some place in which to store some of those goods, having some place in which to care for those goods, some place in which to inspect the goods.

Now, I am aware that the Secretary of the Interior in his annual report has suggested that the maintenance of warehouses is in his opinion not a desirable practice. In his opinion it would be better to establish a system of purchasing agents, nobody knows where. He does not state what the cost will be; but his idea is to establish a system of purchasing agents.

Mr. PARSONS. If the gentleman will yield to me, in his report he says:

It is proposed to develop a system of purchasing through purchasing agents with headquarters at one or more of the large commercial centers.

But the bill does not provide any appropriation for headquarters.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Precisely; and there has been no thoroughly digested plan, so far as I know, of a feasible and working plan by which the Government can purchase $3,000,000 worth of goods a year and distribute them to the Indian agencies scattered over the western half of the United States.

I want to read you a paragraph from the report of the Secretary of the Interior, showing what he proposes, and which it strikes me is a very dangerous expedient. He says:

It is proposed to develop a system of purchasing through purchasing agents with headquarters at one or more of the large commercial centers, and to make arrangements for the elimination of certified checks, contracts, and bonds, and to provide for the settlement of all bills within the discount period, certainly not exceeding thirty days from delivery.

In other words, the Secretary of the Interior proposes to do away with the safeguards which the law has thrown around the purchases of these $3,000,000 of Indian supplies. He proposes himself to appoint purchasing agents who shall go out into the field, and without any certified checks to guarantee bids on supplies, buy the goods in those parts of the country where they may decide it is wise to buy them.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman state how this purchasing is done at this time, under the present procedure?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. At the present time the purchasing is done partly in New York, partly in Chicago, partly in Omaha, partly in St. Louis, partly in San Francisco, after advertising in the papers for bids; and when the bids are advertised for, it is generally found that competition comes, not only from the centers in which the warehouses are located, but that Chicago competes with Omaha to deliver the goods in Omaha; Omaha competes with St. Louis and San Francisco, and these various warehouse centers compete with each other.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman permit one question there?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Do bidders come from any other centers except the cities where these warehouses are located?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think they do.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. What is the source of the gentleman's information?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have been told that they do. I am not able to verify that at the present moment, but I am told that when those bids are called for they are received, as they naturally would be, from the substantial, wide-awake business men in different parts of the country.

Mr. KAHN. Will my friend from Nebraska allow me to make a suggestion to him respecting the bidders? I know for a positive fact that when bids for sugar were called for in the city of San Francisco, bidders from New York competed with the San Francisco bidders.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Precisely. New York is one of the favored spots, and has an Indian warehouse.

Mr. KAHN. And the San Francisco bidders were lower in their bids than the New York bids, and saved the Government many thousands of dollars by reason of that fact.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That does not answer my inquiry, whether this is not a closed corporation between the five cities that are favored with warehouses?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not at all. It is an absurdity to call it a closed corporation. Competition is free to all.

[The time of Mr. HITCHCOCK having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The fact is that the law as passed five years ago only crystallized what Congress had done year after year in establishing five open markets, at which goods could be received and stored; and if this law is repealed indirectly, as is proposed now, by withholding appropriations from these points, it will practically resolve itself into this proposition—that bids are to be called for no one knows where; that the goods may have no place for storage, and that there will be no system of inspection. Now, at the present time when the Government of the United States buys these Indian supplies, they are inspected at the warehouse when they are delivered. Where will they be inspected under this proposed system?

Nobody knows, except that the Secretary of the Interior suggests in his report that the inspection can be made where the goods are delivered—at these various Indian agencies, Indian schools, and elsewhere—which practically means that we will have no system of inspection; that minor officials will be permitted to give a perfunctory inspection when the goods are actually delivered, and when they are needed for use. Inspection is then too late. As it is now, the goods are inspected before they reach the reservation. They are inspected in the warehouses, and if they do not come up to the contract requirements they are not sent to the reservations, but are rejected in the warehouses.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Is it not a fact that the samples will have to be sent east to some headquarters and the goods shipped east for inspection, and that that will put the western manufacturers and merchants at a very great disadvantage?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think so, undoubtedly, in some cases.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will ask the gentleman if that is not the precise situation now as to all other cities except these favored five? Suppose some man living in San Antonio desires to compete; does he not have to submit his samples to Omaha or St. Louis?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. To the nearest point where there is a warehouse. It may be San Francisco or it may be some other point. In the case cited it would be San Francisco.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then, all other cities are at this disadvantage now.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that the Government by buying in large quantities secures merchandise at lower rates than it could by buying only in small quantities?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. And is it not a fact that when buying in large quantities they must have warehouses in which to store the goods, and from which the goods are shipped when needed, to the various points of consumption?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is certainly a fact, and I thank the gentleman from Illinois for pointing out something which I neglected to mention. It would not be possible for an individual or a corporation to buy millions of dollars' worth of goods a year and distribute them without having warehouses in which to store them. Now, there is no charge made that these warehouses are extravagant, no charge made that the rents paid are high; and the fact is that in Omaha, and it may be true in other cities, a special effort is made by the merchants to procure warehouses for the Government at a cheap rent.

Mr. NORRIS. Will my colleague yield for a suggestion?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Under the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee, the only effect would be that the places provided by law could not have any warehouse. There will have to be warehouses at some other place. It does not say that there shall be no warehouses, but from the nature of things there must be some place to store the goods.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the effect of the amendment would be practically chaos. In an inspired editorial in a New York paper the matter is practically admitted. Here is a column and a half, and contained in it is this paragraph favoring the purchasing-agent plan:

> Of course it would be impossible to apply to such piecemeal purchases the same wholesale system of inspection as is now employed. The inspection would have to be done by government officers in charge of each agency and school.

That is what it would amount to. It would amount to purchasing agents buying in piecemeal, now here and now there, in response to some demand for goods. The goods would be hastily bought and shipped and be inspected when the agent was ready to use them, when he could not reject them when below the standard even if he was disposed to do so.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman permit a statement?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Every agency and superintendent has a warehouse, and it does not follow that if these warehouses are discontinued it would be necessary to establish warehouses elsewhere.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not doubt that there is some place at each agency where goods might be stored.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. There are warehouses and commissary departments in each agency large enough to hold all the goods necessary.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not doubt that when goods reach the agency there will be a roof to cover them, but I do declare that it is an absurd proposition to tear down these warehouses already built and substitute a provision which will authorize the purchase of these goods in piecemeal in open market, and to substitute such a provision for this well-digested system which has been the outgrowth of experience and to the best interests of the Government.

Until there is some showing made that the prices paid are excessive, until some showing is made that these five Indian warehouses are maintained at an unreasonable expense, I consider it an unreasonable proposition for the Secretary of the Interior to present to Congress a proposition to repeal a law passed two years ago and substitute something which he himself has not proposed in a reasonable form.

Mr. MADDEN rose.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Before the gentleman from Illinois interrupts me, I want to say that I wish to criticise the Bureau of Indian Affairs for having neglected to prepare a report to Congress for the year ending June 30, 1909. It is now something like eight months since the fiscal year ended, and yet we are unable to get the report of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, which is still in the printer's hands. Congress should have it, and I should have on my desk the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which for some reason he has not yet made public.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in favor of the amendment.

Mr. HAYES. Will the gentleman from South Dakota yield just a moment?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, before the House decides to overturn the practice of years in the purchase or supervision of supplies for the Indian Department, that we ought to have an explanation from some one as to what system they propose to substitute for it. I have been unable to find from the report of the Secretary or from the chairman of the committee any statement as to the system they propose to substitute for the one that has been in vogue. I now ask the chairman if he will be kind enough to enlighten us as to the system they propose to substitute for the one we now have?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The system we are proposing to put into effect is the system used by successful manufacturing houses and railroads. It is the standard system of efficient, modern, business organizations.

Mr. HAYES. Does the gentleman mean for us to understand that his system will operate without any warehouses or places to store the goods?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will fully explain if the gentleman from California will be content for a moment. Mr. Chairman, the committee expected when they proposed this amendment that it would probably meet with opposition in five different portions of the country—New York, Chicago, St. Louis, Omaha, and San Francisco. We anticipated that there would be some opposition from these localities. I am finding no fault with Representatives on this floor from these localities that now have warehouses for contending for the continuation of the warehouses if they believe that to have them discontinued would be to the injury of those localities. But, Mr. Chairman, they are unnecessarily disturbed over this proposition. It is a matter of such little importance to the cities that if they really understood just how it affects them I do not think they would be much concerned about it.

To begin with, the administrative department of the Government recommends the discontinuance of the warehouses on the ground that a better administration can be obtained. It certainly can have no interest to do that except that it will be for the good of the service.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think that purchases made by purchasing agents without publicity is a better system than the one which obtains through securing bids from an advertisement?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There is no suggestion of purchasing without publicity. That question is not involved here, and therefore it is not pertinent.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the purpose of purchasing agents unless it is to give them carte blanche to purchase without any advertising?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Why, does not the gentleman know that under the Reclamation Service to-day there is not a single warehouse maintained, and yet great purchases are being made every day amounting to several times what is purchased by the Indian Bureau, and there is not a single warehouse in connection with the service?

Mr. MADDEN. That is building material that is not affected by the weather, and the kind of material that is to be used by the Indians must be protected by being stored in some place of safety—quite a different proposition.

[By unanimous consent, Mr. BURKE of South Dakota was granted leave to continue for five minutes more, his time having expired.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman is misinformed. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Nebraska is very much disturbed over this proposition——

Mr. PARSONS. Before the gentleman leaves that, I would like to find out just what improved method it is intended the department shall adopt, and for the purpose of asking my question I will read from the Secretary's report on page 27, where he is discussing the advisability of doing away with warehouses. He says:

> As an illustration, I cite a proposal and contract for goods amounting to $200,000 to show the amount paid by the Indian Service on account of its methods in conducting business: Interest on certified checks, $10,000, at 6 per cent for two months, $100; bonds of $100,000, at $1 per thousand, estimated, $100; interest at 6 per cent on $200,000 for four months on account of delay in settlement, $3,000; total, $33,200.

What I want to ask is this: Is the department going to do away with a certified check from a bidder and thus save that $100?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am unable to state.

Mr. PARSONS. Is it going to do away with the bond and save that $100?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I presume not.

Mr. PARSONS. Is it going to purchase only in such amounts that they can be delivered and payment made within thirty days, as he suggests, so that the merchant does not have to allow for any interest on his money?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think it hardly fair for the gentleman to inject this kind of a question into my argument before I have had an opportunity to state what I have to say. After I am through I shall endeavor to answer questions.

Mr. PARSONS. As those are the specific questions made by the Secretary, I hope the chairman of the committee will enlighten us as to what is to be done.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As I was about to say, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], coming from Omaha, seems to be quite disturbed over this question of the maintenance of a warehouse in that city. Last year there passed through that warehouse merchandise of the value of $84,527.85. Is that such a sum of money, does that amount to so much business, that the great city of Omaha is going to suffer even if it never had one dollar of that business?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman has vindicated my position. I am not arguing on behalf of Omaha, but on behalf of the country.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And does the gentleman think that we are justified in maintaining an expense of $6,733.65 on account of that volume of business?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to reply to the gentleman, if he will let me, right there, by citing the fact that there were handled at Omaha 41,000 packages, weighing almost 3,000,000 pounds, and while the amount of money involved was not large, because of the character of goods purchased, there was a large amount of business actually done there.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now, I find that in the great city of San Francisco business amounting to $141,547.46 passed through the warehouse there last year at an expense to the Government of $9,563.84—not a very important item from a great city like San Francisco.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will permit, the warehouse there is in the interest of the Indians themselves. So far as the expense is concerned, there was purchased at that station 800,000 pounds of sugar during this last year, which was sold to the Government at a rate far below the existing market price, because the firm that had the sugar on its hands had bought when it was much lower and they gave the Government the advantage of that bargain.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now, does the gentleman think that purchase could not have been made if there had not been a warehouse at San Francisco?

Mr. KAHN. I think it is more than likely that the San Francisco firm would not have known anything about the bidding, nor would any other firms except a few favored contractors, who, as in the early days before the warehouses were established and the law was changed, used to learn of the bidding, to the exclusion of legitimate manufacturers and producers. The very purpose of establishing these warehouses was to give general information to the merchants of the country in the various sections of the country in order that there might be an opportunity to bid upon all these goods for the Indian Service.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Is the gentleman asking a question——

Mr. KAHN. And I want to call my friend's attention to the fact that prior to the establishment of these warehouses there used to be two and three bidders on as much as 7,000,000 pounds of beef, while now with these warehouses established in various parts of the country you have 30, 40, and 50 bidders, and the Government is getting the advantage of it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Why, Mr. Chairman, the warehouse question has nothing in the world to do with the advertising or the number of bidders or anything whatsoever as suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. PARSONS rose.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let me proceed for a moment.

Mr. PARSONS. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the inspection is not made at the warehouse?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will tell you about the inspection if you will give me time to come to that question.

Mr. PARSONS. I wish to make a suggestion——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In the great city of Chicago, where they are not so disturbed over this matter, they did a business of $524,528.74 at an expense of $16,987.55, and in the great city of New York, where my good friend comes from, they did a business amounting to $495,350.59, and there was an expense incurred in connection with that warehouse of $15,639.55.

I do not think, Mr. Chairman, even if that warehouse had anything to do with the volume of business, that is a sum to disturb the business interests of the city of New York. But if there is anything in the argument that these warehouses ought to be maintained at these several places, then what about the cities that have no warehouses? Should not we have one at Boston? Then go a little farther West and put one, perhaps, at Buffalo. Go down South and establish a few. Then go out farther West and on into the Northwest, at St. Paul and Minneapolis, and put in warehouses, and then go over to Seattle, then down to Los Angeles, and come around into some of the Southwestern States and put one, say, at Kansas City; thus many of us will be furnished with warehouses, so that when this question comes up we can defeat every proposed change in administration that will mean economy to the Government. Now, Mr. Chairman, under the present system of purchases through the warehouses, it has resulted in a higher price being paid for articles in some instances than they could have been purchased of a local dealer near or upon the reservation where the article was used. I have some concrete cases that I am going to give.

At Fort Belknap, or rather at the warehouse, McCormick binders cost $138.65; harrows, $11.75; McCormick mowers, $51.17; plows, $12.05; binding twine, $9.24; and the prices of those articles on the reservation where they were to be used was $116 as against $138 for the binders, $11.50 for the harrows as against $11.75, $51 as against $51.17, $12.50 as compared with $12.05, and $8 as compared with $13.87.

In other words, it is costing more in some instances by this system of warehouses to purchase the supplies used in the Indian Service than the supplies could be purchased for without any advertising at all. Go out into the locality where the reservation is situated, and where the article is to be used, and you can buy it cheaper even in open market without competition than you can get it through the warehouses after advertising for competitive bids. Now, last year there were purchased several millions of dollars of property or supplies for the Indian Service, and out of all of it only $1,459,172.67 went through the warehouses.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Can the gentleman explain how any official of the Government would accept bids, with the right to reject all bids, when the prices are notoriously higher than he knows the goods can be purchased for?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, under the system it could follow that this could happen and still an official be entirely justified in accepting the bid.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Understanding something about the system myself, the gentleman will have difficulty in explaining how an article made in Chicago is paid for at a higher price delivered at Chicago than it can be purchased for elsewhere.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] permit me to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] if it could not happen in this way, as it has happened in a number of instances where supplies are purchased on open bids. The lowest bidder, we will say, is a resident of the city of St. Paul or Minneapolis. The goods purchased have to be shipped to Chicago to the warehouse and then distributed from the warehouse out to the agencies; and in the distribution of the article, whatever it may be, the cost has been very much greater. Say, for instance, if they purchased an article from a merchant or the manufacturer in Minneapolis. It goes to the warehouse in Chicago and then to the White Earth Reservation in Minnesota, so that the article goes back through the city in which it is manufactured.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the way it is done.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken about the character of the supplies that go to the warehouse. Harvesters and mowers do not necessarily go to the warehouses.

Mr. TAWNEY. Any supply, no matter what it is——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] has just stated the amount of supplies purchased that do not go to the warehouses. The character of supplies that have been required to go to the warehouses are the supplies of which the Indians were notoriously robbed before this system was put into effect, as I shall undertake to show before this discussion ends.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and I will be very glad to furnish my friend from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] with a copy——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the gentleman claim that that report has been published?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have it here. I will be very glad——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I applied to the gentleman's office a day or two ago and was told it had not been released.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If he will send a page down to my committee room he can get a copy of the report now. On page 31 of this report the commissioner states:

> Between July 1, 1908, and June 30, 1909, the purchase section handled 664 formal contracts involving the sum of $3,248,976.61; made 6,451 purchases in the open market to the amount of $3,714,215.32; and 3,927 other expenditures in the sum of $1,802,431.01 were passed on. In addition thereto 54 per capita payments amounting to $3,343,490.02 were authorized, $225,362.90 were spent in the transportation of goods and supplies, and $9,676.12 for passenger transportation.

I gave the amount of these purchases a moment ago. It was $1,459,272.67, passing through the warehouses. Now, in the matter of inspection, it is the opinion of the department that they can get a better inspection from the place of shipment or some of the factories than under the present system.

Now, something as to inspection. In 1907 the Auditor for the Interior Department, in a report to the Secretary of the Treasury, said:

> In the examination of accounts for Indian supplies it frequently happens that there is a discrepancy in the invoice, which makes it necessary to go to the source of final delivery for a verification of the contents of some particular case or package. Almost as frequently it is demonstrated that the inspector's certificate is unreliable, because, as a matter of fact, an inspection of the particular case or package has not been made.

Now, the committee is of the same opinion as the department, that they can get a better inspection at the factory or at the place of shipment or at the point of destination, and it does not appear to the committee at least that there is a single reason in the world for continuing these warehouses. By discontinuing them you would save thousands of dollars in expense. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that, in addition to the amounts regularly appropriated, as they appear in the annual Indian appropriation bills, there have been deficiencies—amounting at one time in one year to $50,000, and in another year to $18,000, and in another to $55,000—to cover the subject of purchase of Indian supplies and the expenses in connection therewith.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the gentleman state what are those items?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have only the figures which show the amounts of the appropriation; they were largely for transportation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it is largely transportation. There could be no deficiencies in the items for rent and salaries.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. For instance, if a shipper or manufacturer in Pittsburg bid on something to be delivered to the Carlisle School he makes his bid, and that article, if his bid is accepted, is sent to New York, perhaps, put in the warehouse, and then shipped back to Carlisle when there is use for it. If you did not have the warehouse system he would make his bid and furnish the article when called upon, whereupon it would be shipped direct to the place where it is to be used. That is a practice that prevails to-day in the Reclamation Service, and it is a practice that the Indian Service are effecting to a very large extent through their agents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for one minute more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PARSONS. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not also true that many of these goods never enter the Indian warehouse, but are shipped directly to the place of consumption?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. PARSONS. So that that would have nothing to do with the warehouses?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I presume, if we continue the warehouses, after a time there will be nothing stored in them. We will have the warehouses and the expense of maintaining them; and that is all there is in the proposition. It is simply a question of whether or not we shall continue these warehouses and the increased cost for this service at from $35,000 to $60,000 a year, when we can get along better without them. We wish to discontinue them now.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, in what I am going to say I do not desire in any way to reflect upon the Committee on Indian Affairs. I am sure, and no doubt the majority of the Members of the House feel as I do, that they exercised their best judgment in following the recommendations of the Indian Office and the Secretary of the Interior, and honestly believe that they are acting for the best interests of the Government in recommending this change. This proposed change, however, means a return to the old system of purchasing agents, as has been stated before, and that system has been tried and been found wanting. It has proved unsatisfactory and very objectionable for many reasons, hence it was changed by the establishment of so-called "Indian warehouses." In the first place, Mr. Chairman, the system of purchasing agents would not permit of a general distribution of the purchases through all sections of the country, nor could the goods be purchased where they could be bought cheapest. Besides, it opened the door for a system of favoritism by affording opportunity to a few favorite bidders to secure contracts and by ignoring the best and cheapest markets. Now, I do not claim that under the present management of the Indian Office such abuses would recur, but surely the system itself invites them.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In what way, will the gentleman please point out, has the warehouse to do with it?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. For the simple reason that if your amendment is adopted the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs are without restrictions whatsoever. They could expend $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 just as they saw fit. They might go into the open market and buy from the shelf or give contracts to whomsoever and wherever they pleased.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In what way does the warehouse affect that in the slightest degree?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. With the present warehouses, Mr. Chairman, a system has grown up which insures the making of general contracts to be bid for all over the country, and these contracts have been entered into not only by the business men and manufacturers in the cities where the warehouses exist, but by the manufacturers of all large cities in all sections of the country.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Do these proposals require that the bids shall be opened at some particular warehouse?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Surely the gentleman knows better than that.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. They are opened in St. Louis; they are opened in Chicago; and they are opened at the other warehouses; certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The law does not require that.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. And by distributing these warehouses over the country, all sections are given an opportunity to bid, because the distance to these warehouses is not as great as if they were required under the purchasing-agent system to send their samples East and to send their goods East for inspection. For that reason I say that the system of warehouses is the fairest possible system to devise, because under it merchants in St. Paul, Louisville, Philadelphia, and anywhere else can bid in competition with each other.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I know the gentleman does not want to make a misstatement. Our merchants claim they can not bid under the warehouse system at all, and they very strongly object, and inform me that it costs a great deal more to get goods under the warehouse system than it would under the other system.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Unfortunately the Department of the Interior has not furnished us with any figures to show whether the goods have been purchased more economically under the new system than under the old. I claim, and I have facts and figures to show it, that the goods were purchased much more cheaply under this warehouse system than under any other plan, because everything is open to competition, while under the old system it was simply a matter of favoritism on the part of the purchasing agents.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman remarks that he has no figures from the Department of the Interior or the Indian Bureau showing whether it is more or less expensive under the warehouse system. I will ask the gentleman if he has not seen a statement in writing from the Interior Department, and also from the Indian Bureau, stating that this warehouse system had been vastly more expensive in the matter of purchasing supplies, and that it was costing the Indians and the Government a great many thousands of dollars unnecessarily?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I deny the proposition. The trouble is that we lack the opportunity of comparison. We have no official figures on prices in any of the official reports.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will show the gentleman some figures then, if he will take time to examine them.

[The time of Mr. BARTHOLDT having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. What I referred to was this: The merchants in St. Louis show me by facts and figures that the department, in purchasing medical supplies, dry goods, hardware, shoes, stoves, and other things that the Indian needs, is paying much less to-day than was paid under the old system; and I predict here and now that if this amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota is adopted, the deficiency to which he has called attention, amounting to $50,000 a year, will be much larger next year than in former years.

I want to say right here that I am not advocating the present system because of any advantage that it gives to St. Louis. I am speaking from observation and from a knowledge of this system, because for many years I have participated in the debates on this subject.

The secretary of the largest business men's organization in the city of St. Louis writes me that if the Indian Commissioner were allowed to have his own way about the purchase of supplies for the Indian agencies we should find that he would buy nearly all the goods, if not all of them, in St. Louis and Chicago. He would probably buy agricultural implements and groceries in Chicago, and he would certainly buy shoes, hardware, medical supplies, and stoves in St. Louis, so we are not materially interested in the change. We would get our share in any event, because our prices are cheapest for these articles. If the agents did not go to work and buy the goods in the nearest markets—New York or Philadelphia, for instance—if, in other words, they gave the West a fair chance, we would not be afraid of this change.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman perhaps knows that the goods sent to the St. Louis warehouse do not necessarily have to be purchased in St. Louis.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I understand that.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They may have come from some other city. It is a mere bagatelle in any event.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Oh, no.

Mr. SABATH. How much is the amount?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Goods to the amount of $213,000 were purchased in St. Louis, Mo., under contracts with St. Louis firms.

Mr. SAUNDERS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The suggestion that the warehouse plan excludes favoritism and the proposed plan will allow it is one worthy of consideration. Will the gentleman tell the House how the warehouse plan excludes favoritism and how the proposed plan will make it possible? If he can show how these things will come about, it is a sufficient reason to defeat the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I thought I had made that plain. Under the warehouse system general contracts are advertised for, thus giving every merchant in the United States an opportunity——

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will not that be done under the proposed system?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I understood it will be.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Oh, the gentleman "understands;" there is no guaranty in the phraseology of the bill and nothing to show that it will be.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does not the law require it?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; because the proviso has been stricken out.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It was stricken out because there was a law already existing providing the way in which Indian supplies should be bought.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; it was stricken out because it was in conflict with the special law under which we are operating.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Let me ask the gentleman if this section, which I will read, is not to be operative——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Oh, the gentleman need not read the section; I know it very well. The proviso which was to make that section operative was stricken from the bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the thing that has impressed me so far is the remarkable solicitude that has suddenly sprung up in the breasts of some Members in behalf of the Indian, and the fact that the solicitude, while expressing itself for the Indian—not for any particular spot or locality—seems to come always from a Member who is interested in the spot where one of these warehouses is located. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, it was stated by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that this to him was a business proposition pure and simple, although before he seated himself he coupled it with some altruistic expressions for the Indian. The position of the committee is that this is a business proposition; but it is not a business proposition in behalf of New York, it is not a proposition in behalf of the imperial city of Chicago, nor the grand and great city of St. Louis that is to surpass them all, nor is it a business proposition for San Francisco, but for the Indian wards of the Government and for the Treasury of the United States.

The Secretary of the Interior has furnished a report, and this has been subscribed to by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that the maintenance of these Indian warehouses cost the Government of the United States every year $56,000 and a little more that is purely wasted.

And, furthermore, it costs the Indians of the country whose supplies are thus purchased very large amounts of money in excess of this; and why? Take, for instance, the location of the warehouses of the Indians. We will take the situation in the Northwest: The warehouse that serves us is located in Chicago. The Indians are not located there, nor are many of them located within a radius of several hundred miles, but they are most of them located in the States of North and South Dakota and in Minnesota. When it becomes necessary to have goods purchased that are to be furnished to Indians way off on the plains of Dakota or in the woods of Minnesota, and some gentleman in St. Paul or in Deadwood, S. Dak., desires to bid, he is obliged to make out his bid and send it to Chicago, and if by any hook or crook he should be successful in his bid he has to send his goods to Chicago, and there they lay and are retained for a long period of time, and then when they are needed to be used they are sent back the whole distance of 700 or 800 miles, and Uncle Sam and the Indian pays the freight both ways. [Laughter.] If that is not artificial, if that is businesslike, if that is economy, I would like to have the gentleman from Nebraska point out where it lies.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out the fact that the Secretary of the Interior does not propose to purchase, as the gentleman says, in these regions near the reservations, but it is proposed to develop a system of having purchasing agents with headquarters in one or more of the large commercial centers.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman certainly has not thought very seriously of this matter or he never would have asked that question. While it may be some man with supervisory power over this situation may be located somewhere—I suppose he has got to be; he can not be up in the air—still when the goods are purchased, they will be purchased at spots where they are to be used, and the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs have emphasized that as clearly and as emphatically as it is possible to be done.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to have the gentleman quote the Secretary.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Very well. I will read from the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I have not the report of the Secretary here. He says:

The more one considers this statement—

In reference to the purchase of Indian supplies by the warehouse system—

the more firmly is he convinced that both economically and from the standpoint of good administration, the proposition to eliminate the warehouses and to handle the purchase of the supplies for the Indian Bureau through one central purchasing agency, which will invite bids under a system that will enable the local dealers to participate in the business, is a wise one.

So much for the proposition the gentleman has stated.

Mr. PARSONS. What does the commissioner mean by "local dealers?"

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. He means men who are dealing in these commodities at the places where they are to be used.

Mr. PARSONS. And at Carlisle, for instance——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is not that the local dealer at the central agency?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Why, certainly not; and there is nothing about it that even suggests that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the gentleman will read the language, that interpretation can be placed upon it, he will see.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have read the language several times, and I think I understand it, and it is probably in the RECORD now, and the gentleman can read it to-morrow, and then maybe he will understand it.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I should be very pleased to do so.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman tell me what the Secretary means in his annual report when he says it is the purpose to develop a system of purchasing through purchasing agents, with headquarters in one or more of the large commercial centers?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. He means that these purchases shall probably be made under the general direction or supervisory power of some man who is located somewhere advantageously for carrying on that business. It may be that he will be located in New York, but I apprehend not—more probably somewhere out a thousand or two miles nearer the Indians who are to be served.

Mr. PARSONS. But it is not going to be at the place where the goods are to be used.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Not necessarily. There is not a warehouse now anywhere near where any of the goods are to be used.

Mr. PARSONS. But I understood the gentleman was arguing that the Secretary now said that they would be used——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

[By unanimous consent, Mr. MILLER of Minnesota was granted five minutes more time.]

Mr. PARSONS. I understood that the gentleman was arguing now upon the letter of the Secretary that they were to be purchased at the place where they were to be used.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. PARSONS. Then they will not be purchased at any of the large commercial centers, because none of them is used in the large commercial centers.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. This man has to live and be somewhere, but he is not necessarily going to buy all of these commodities where he is located.

Mr. PARSONS. Where is he going to buy them?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. In the localities where they are to be used, as far as that is possible, economically.

Mr. PARSONS. Is not that done now?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No.

Mr. PARSONS. Two-thirds of the purchases are made in the open market now.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Well, that is true.

Mr. PARSONS. Over three millions were purchased without advertising last year. And were not those purchases made at the local dealers, and are there any more that can be safely made at the local dealers than last year?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That is entirely apart from this question of warehouses. To revert back once more to the question we were really trying to discuss, I want to call the attention of the committee to this further fact, that by the method that has grown up around this warehouse system, the business of bidding on these Indian supplies has been restricted to a few favored ones.

I do not mean by that favor of any individual, but the favor necessarily of the locality in which they may happen to be located. There is also grown up in connection with this a system of calling for specifications and plans, such as have further restricted it, and I am now informed that while there are many fine wholesale concerns scattered over this country in good-sized cities, as a matter of fact those which happen to be located at centers where these warehouses now exist are the only ones that get contracts for furnishing these supplies. So I am not surprised, Mr. Chairman, that those gentlemen who come from these respective spots favored by Congress heretofore are each solicitous for the welfare of the Indian, who is being fed, and whose constituents in turn are being fed by the prosperity that comes from having these ample opportunities for selling to the Indians.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Does not the gentleman, having at heart the welfare of the Indian and the welfare of the Government, consider the question of prices? Is it not a fact that under the warehouse system prices have been cheaper and the goods purchased——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. How do you compare the prices?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I compare the prices between the warehouse system and the old purchasing-agency system which you want to reinaugurate.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. My dear sir, the old system to which the gentleman evidently refers is one that we would have to go back to war time and compare prices now with war prices. If I recollect distinctly, the warehouse was put in your city way back in the seventies, and was sneaked in surreptitiously by the action of an administrative officer of this department and was later put right by a positive act of Congress.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. To which officer does the gentleman refer? Mr. Chairman, the gentleman certainly is not willing to let this go into the RECORD, as it is a misstatement of fact. The warehouse at St. Louis was established only about nine years ago, and that is about the time that this system of warehouses was inaugurated.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That may be true——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. And I am referring to the old system which has been denounced on this floor time and time again as a disgrace, and the gentleman wants to return to that system now.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Oh, if the gentleman will take and study the statute passed, I think in 1874, he will find a provision there which says the Secretary of the Treasury may establish warehouses for the handling of Indian supplies at the city of St. Louis.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. But he did not do so.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not know whether he did or not.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It was not done.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. So, Mr. Chairman, the question resolves itself into whether we shall legislate for the benefit of these favored localities or whether we shall legislate in favor of the Indians and ourselves.

The experience we had during a period of many years justifies the deduction and shows, I think, conclusively, that this system of warehouses results in expense to the Government, results in costing the Indians more for their goods than they otherwise would have to pay, results in restricting competition to certain localities, and cuts off every advantage and benefit that should come to these other wholesalers who want to compete; thereby necessarily failing to reduce the cost of those commodities at the points where they are to be housed in warehouses, or at the points where they are to be used by the Indians. Now, as I have said, it seems to me entirely reasonable and right that we should have some degree of common sense and businesslike judgment, and we should have a system such as has been suggested by the gentleman from South Dakota, that will permit the purchase of these supplies at points where they are to be needed, thereby saving great expense in the cost of administration. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I desire to say that I am indifferent as to what happens to the Indian warehouse in New York. The amount of business done there is insignificant in comparison to the great mass of business done in that city. I have no interest in this matter at all, except from the standpoint of the Indians. I know something about what has been done in the past in furnishing the Indian with supplies. I know how he had been robbed year after year, until it was necessary to devise a system of inspection that prevented him from being defrauded by those who considered him legitimate prey.

As I recall, the goods mostly supplied in the city of New York are clothing. Contracts are made there for supplying clothing for the Indians throughout the United States. The clothing furnished costs in the neighborhood of $1.55 a suit. The slightest difference in the character of material, in the braid, in the style of button, makes a great difference in the cost to the contractor.

Back in the nineties, about the time this provision was placed in the bill, the then Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Bliss, of New York, persuaded a member of one of the largest clothing houses in the city of New York—and I have no hesitation in mentioning it, the firm of Rogers, Peet & Co.—to accept a position of inspector of goods at the New York warehouse in order to prevent the Indians from being robbed. He was a gentleman who could not ordinarily be hired by the Government at any salary, but induced by the representations of the Department of the Interior that it was essential for the welfare of the Indians, he accepted the appointment of inspector at a salary of $10 a day, and gave to the Government in that work all the time demanded. The man was a Democrat. He was appointed under a Republican administration. He was retained in that position for seven or eight years, and his commission was renewed year by year only by the greatest pressure on the part of the Government.

The late Colonel Pierce, of St. Louis, and there are Members of this House who recall him, told me in 1900 that as a member of the Sioux Commission he had gone down into the Sioux country and spent six months there conducting negotiations and investigating conditions, and he stated that those Indians had been robbed of over $3,000,000 because of the character of supplies that had been sent to them under treaties with the Government.

It is a notorious fact that although samples are submitted from time to time with the bids, that when the materials contracted to be delivered reached the reservations the character of the supplies were very different from that required under the contract.

Gentlemen say they wish to abolish the warehouses. I believe there are too many warehouses. I do not believe that five are necessary. I have never thought so, and at different times during my service on the Committee on Indian Affairs, when attempts were made to provide specifically for different warehouses, I opposed the amendments that were offered on the floor of the House.

But the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his report, states that one warehouse is necessary. He does not say where it should be. I am indifferent as to its location, but under the amendment offered by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs there can be no warehouse anywhere.

Now, what is proposed to be done here? To make contracts for supplies aggregating three or four millions of dollars in numberless towns and hamlets throughout the country. These contracts are made with samples submitted, and it is suggested that the cereals, sugar, boots, shoes, and clothing be shipped to the various agencies throughout the country without inspection and rely upon somebody at the agencies to determine whether the goods shipped are of the character demanded by the contract. I say that it will open up a system of graft yet unknown in the history of the country. Anybody who is familiar with the Indian Service knows that the Indians under that system were robbed in a most shameful manner.

Let me call the attention of the gentlemen who seemed to be somewhat familiar with this subject to some things they do not know about. Under the provisions of the Revised Statutes the President is required to appoint a Board of Indian Commissioners, composed of not more than 10 persons, from men noted for their intelligence and philanthropy, who shall serve without pecuniary compensation. On that board to-day are Mr. Merrill E. Gates, who for over twenty years was president of Amherst College; Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from New York may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Bannon, of Brooklyn. Before he went into President Roosevelt's Cabinet, Mr. Bonaparte was a member of the board. The late Bishop Whipple and the late Darwin R. James were upon it for many years. This board, under the law, under section 2401 of the Revised Statutes, is charged with the duty of inspecting the goods purchased for Indians in connection with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and it is charged with the duty of consulting with him. This board does inspect these goods. It has its representatives in these various warehouses at different times in the year to ascertain whether the goods delivered under the contracts come up to the specifications. Some member of the board is present at the opening of the contracts. They have been of great service. Under the system now proposed, by which bids shall be invited in every little hamlet and locality in the United States to supply goods which cost in the aggregate over $3,000,000, it would be absolutely impossible for these men to perform the duties that have been put upon them. Why was it deemed necessary, gentlemen, that a commission of this character should inspect the goods to be furnished Indians—men selected for "their intelligence and philanthropy?" Simply because it is a notorious fact that throughout a great part of this country it has never been considered improper or immoral to rob the Indian either of his land, his money, or his goods.

I am opposed to any legislation which will open wide the doors to a system which fortunately has long since been eliminated in the administration of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would not the goods be bought in exactly the same way whether we have the warehouses or do not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not so sure that they will; and I am not sure, Mr. Chairman, that at a time when the Department of the Interior is under the gravest charges and under a cloud before the American people, that its recommendations in a matter of this kind should have any considerable weight with the Congress of the United States. It is a long time since any of the distinguished men at the head of the Department of the Interior have made such recommendations; and it is hardly desirable for the House to adopt such sweeping recommendations and reestablish what has proved an undesirable system upon the recommendations of a department now under a cloud and being investigated in connection with other matters of administration upon grave charges, particularly since, in the judgment of many men who have devoted years in attempting to eradicate fraud from the Indian Service, the chief result will be to develop in the Indian Service the most extensive system of graft and fraud possible to conceive. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota will not be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and amendments thereto end in ten minutes; that five minutes of that time be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia, my colleague on the committee [Mr. SAUNDERS]; five minutes of the time by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]; and at that time the committee rise. I will include two minutes for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much has the gentleman included in his request?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Twelve minutes. And the paragraph and all amendments thereto, including the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota, as the Chair understands, asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and amendments close in twelve minutes; five minutes to be occupied by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], five minutes by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], and two minutes by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]; and that at the expiration of that time the committee rise.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that the gentleman can not make that motion.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I did not make the motion; I asked unanimous consent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object to including the request that the committee rise. I think the matter should be settled by the men who have been here to hear the discussion.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Well, I will leave that out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again state the question. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and amendments thereto close in twelve minutes; five minutes to be occupied by the gentleman from Virginia, five minutes by the gentleman from California, and two minutes by the gentleman from Illinois. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Reserving the right of object, I will ask, Does the gentleman then intend to move that the committee rise?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I intend to do that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall object.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon the paragraph and pending amendments, including the substitute, close in twelve minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota moves that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments close in twelve minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, this system that has grown up in recent years of establishing warehouses at principal points, where goods can be shipped speedily and promptly to the agencies, is far in advance of the system that prevailed prior to the establishment of those warehouses, and I believe with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that if we go back to the old system, the Indian supply department will again prove a system of rottenness and corruption, just as it was prior to 1880.

Here is what was said on the floor of this House at the time the changes were made.

Mr. Ryan, of Kansas, on the 15th of April, 1880, speaking of the service, said that there is a monopoly of bidders for these supplies; the competition is confined to professional contractors. By examination of the records it will be found that in the case of the very largest contracts, where there have been as high as 7,000,000 pounds of beef contracted for in one contract, there have been only about seven bidders in all.

Now, at the time that statement was made those seven bidders represented all the competitive bidding in this whole country, and to-day in the various cities where bids are called for you have as many bidders as that on any single commodity.

Mr. Ryan further stated:

> There is a class of professional contractors who do not require much notice. They have their agents in Washington and are ready at all times. Ten days' notice will do them, and, indeed, no notice at all would answer their purpose.
> But what we want is that adequate notice shall be given, so that the producers of the West may have an opportunity to bid for the sale of these supplies to the Government.

Mr. Dunnell said:

> Let the men who can furnish the supplies have an opportunity to make bids and a fair chance. The contracts are all advertised here. The agent is in New York. He knows when the advertisement takes place, and can post his principals. But the men in Kansas who really furnish the supplies do not know anything about it, and can not know anything about it, because they have no means of ascertaining. The bids are to be opened in New York, and men who might bid are a thousand miles off. They can not afford to go to New York.

In that way the bids for supplies that were to be used in Dakota were opened in New York, the awards were made in New York, and the goods were sold to the Indians at a much higher price than they would have been sold if they had been purchased in the neighborhood where they originated.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I should like to ask how the maintenance of a warehouse in New York has any bearing upon that question? In other words, you question the motives of the movement. The system certainly is not changed by the question whether the Government maintains a warehouse in New York or whether it does not.

Mr. KAHN. It does make a great difference in this: The Government issues advertisements for certain supplies to be delivered at the New York warehouse. The men in the various lines of business who produce the goods that are called for are notified from that warehouse, and they know that this bidding is going on. They put in bids, and the consequence is there is keen competition. That system prevails in every city of the country where there is a warehouse.

But the merchants and producers in the various cities where these warehouses exist are not the only men who bid upon these advertisements, but bids are received from all over the country, and it has resulted in a material saving to the Indians of this country by maintaining this competition that has grown up as a result of the warehouses. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, like other gentlemen here, I feel an interest in the Indian warehouse in my city, and am somewhat tempted to take the same position which they have taken, which I consider very natural and quite proper.

Some years ago I gave considerable attention to the subject of the Indian warehouse, particularly at Chicago, when it was proposed to make some change in the method of purchasing Indian supplies. I went over the matter with the Indian Commissioner here, and I reached the conclusion then, which I have entertained ever since, that while it would be for the best interests of the service to abolish the Indian warehouses at New York, St. Louis, Omaha, and San Francisco and maintain the Indian warehouse at Chicago, where most of the business is done, yet if it be necessary to abolish all of these Indian warehouses and stop the payment of the employees at all of them in order to escape the abuse of paying salaries at places where certainly they are not needed, it were better to abolish them all than to maintain the existing abuse caused by the continuance of them all. And, so far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing in the interest of the service, in the interest of economy, in the interest of giving a proper use of the money which is expended by the Government, to permit the purchases to be made in the manner which has been suggested, in open bids in the market, and let the Chicago people who wish to bid take their chances with the rest of the country upon even terms and without any local preference. [Applause.]

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, every word stated by the gentleman from California is doubtless true, as it relates to past conditions, but he has failed to show that by the perpetuation of the warehouse system the country at large will be protected against a return of these conditions. It has not been shown that the warehouse serves in anywise to protect the Indian against imposition or to prevent administrative abuses. The gentleman from New York drew a doleful picture of what would come to pass should we abolish the existing warehouses, but he has failed to show that the existence of the warehouse system was in the interest of the Indians.

The warehouse system has been the subject of such excessive laudation on the part of its advocates, that one would think it was the very acme of improved business methods, but I want to bring before the House what the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has had to say about the system in vogue, and then I will submit to this body whether it wants to continue that system. Here is what the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has to say:

> The Indian supplies are purchased under a system—

And mark you, that is the warehouse system—

> which is not based on commercial methods, and as a result thereof, there is a lack of competition.

The gentleman from Missouri has stated that the warehouse system is a system of competition, but his statement is in direct contravention of that of the commissioner. Now, the commissioner says further:

> The business is not so enticing to manufacturers as commercial business, for reasons given below, and as a consequence, goods are not being obtained at the best prices, and trade discount is an unknown factor.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I want to say to my friend that from what he has read, I am satisfied and led to believe, that the Indian Office is trying to bring the warehouse system into disrepute in order to change it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Well, let that pass as a reflection by the gentleman from Missouri upon the Indian Department. All I have to say is that the very thing which our friends claim as a product of the warehouse system, is specifically denied on the part of the head of this department.

Now, if the warehouse system is abolished, you will get a system under which supplies will be purchased under existing law relating to advertisement. The purchases will be made under the general law which provides that—> all purchases and contracts of supplies for any department of the Government, except for personal services, shall be made by advertising a sufficient time previously for proposals respecting the same, when the public exigencies do not require the immediate delivery of the articles or performance of the service.

I want to say further, that so far from the warehouse system providing for local competition, it excludes competition, according to the statement of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Under the system proposed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs he says that—> competition on the part of local dealers throughout the country and inspection and purchase of goods at factories, with prompt settlement therefor, will result in lower prices.

The whole proposition in a nutshell, and stated in concrete form, is that the present system, so far from being a good one, is a bad one, and, in the judgment of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, ought to be abolished.

The proposed system will be under the law providing for advertisement. The bids will be open to the whole country, and there will be no elimination of local bidders. The abuses referred to by the gentleman from California were doubtless administrative abuses, and the use of the warehouses for storage purposes is not in anywise effectual to remove those abuses or hinder their return.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PARSONS. There were some 250,000 shipments. Is each of these shipments to be inspected?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I understand there will be an inspection; yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BARTHOLDT) there were—ayes 36, noes 42.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. BURKE of South Dakota and Mr. BARTHOLDT to tell the House.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 36, noes 45.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-five gentlemen present; not a quorum.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The call of the roll is the regular order, and the Clerk will proceed with the call.

The Clerk called the roll.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has called the roll. The Chair will direct the Clerk to read paragraph 2 of Rule XXIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whenever a Committee of the Whole House or the Whole House on the state of the Union finds itself without a quorum, which shall consist of 100 Members, the Chairman shall cause the roll to be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise and the Chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal; but if on such call a quorum shall appear, the committee shall thereupon resume its sitting without further order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee rises in pursuance of the rule just read.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 19028, the Indian appropriation bill, and, upon a point of no quorum present being made, ascertained that it was without a quorum, and that thereupon, as required by the rule, the roll was called, and that the call of the roll disclosed the following absentees, whom he reported to the House as required by the rule:

The SPEAKER. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports that the point of no quorum being made in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and no quorum being present, the roll was called, and under the rule the absentees have been reported. It appears there were present 166.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 100, noes 70.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken; and tellers were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] will take their places as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 70.

So the motion to adjourn was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 21, 1910.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

INCREASED COST OF LIVING.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Pursuant to the authority conferred by Senate resolution No. 165, of February 9, 1910, authorizing an investigation by a committee of the Senate into the cost of living and any increase in the same since 1900, and whether the price of the necessaries of life which enter into the general use and consumption of the people have, since that year, increased, et cetera, the Chair appoints Mr. JOHNSTON as an additional member of the committee, in place of Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, who was excused from service upon the committee on the last legislative day.

ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for inclusion in the agricultural appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1911, $50,000 (S. Doc. No. 374), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 10th instant, certain information as to the amount of money required to finish the reclamation projects now under consideration, and also the amount of money expended upon each of the projects, etc. (S. Doc. No. 376), which, on motion of Mr. HEYBURN, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM OF WILLIAM B. DUNCAN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court in the cause of William B. Duncan, administrator of David S. Jones, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 375), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE. I present resolutions adopted by George H. Ward Post, No. 10, Department of Massachusetts, Grand Army of the Republic. The resolutions are brief. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Library.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on the Library and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS GEORGE H. WARD POST, NO. 10,
DEPARTMENT OF MASSACHUSETTS,
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
Worcester, Mass., February 17, 1910.

HON. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LODGE: At a regular meeting of this post it was unanimously voted:

"That the George H. Ward Post, No. 10, Department of Massachusetts, Grand Army of the Republic, as a post, condemns the idea of placing in the Hall of Fame, in the National Capitol, at Washington, D. C., of the statue of one Robert E. Lee, in the uniform of a rebel general, who for four years, with others, sought to destroy the unity of the Nation, and we most earnestly and most emphatically object to, and protest, as a post, and as citizens and defenders of the Nation, to its being allowed to remain in the National Capitol, or to its acceptance by Congress in behalf of, or as representatives of, a loyal, patriotic, and united people."

It was also voted that the adjutant be instructed to send a copy of said vote to the Senators from this State, and that each be asked to use his best endeavors and his vote to prevent the acceptance and placing of said statue, and to carry out the wishes of the comrades as expressed by said vote.

Yours, very respectfully,

FORDIS O. BUSHNELL, Adjutant.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Preston, Fairview, Franklin, and Whitney, all in the State of Idaho, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to increase the rate of postage on periodicals and magazines, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. SCOTT. I present resolutions adopted by the West Virginia State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, pertaining to food products. I ask that the resolutions be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

WEST VIRGINIA STATE GRANGE, PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY,
THIRTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL SESSION.

WORTHY MASTER: Your committee on resolutions has had under consideration the following matters presented by Brother Huyett; and respectfully recommend the adoption of the same, with a few modifications agreed to by the author.

Respectfully submitted.

H. B. DARNALL,
R. E. THRASHER,
D. W. WORKING.

The annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture, which has just been given to the public through the newspapers, estimating the value of the farm products of the country during the current year at more than $8,000,000,000, seems to be creating a false impression in the minds of most readers. All of this great addition to our usable wealth is not net profit to the farmer; and it seems that some systematic effort should be made to place the essential facts of this report before the public in their true light. This is attempted briefly, as follows:

There are 6,000,000 farms in the United States, on which 12,000,000 farm workers are employed, and on which about 35,000,000 people live—and ought to live well. When even the enormous total of Secretary Wilson's estimated farm values is divided among the millions who live and work on the farms, the showing appeals to the imagination with much less force than when the totals seem to represent a great stream of wealth flowing into the money boxes of the farmers.

Dividing the $8,760,000,000 among the farms of the country, we have an average product of $1,460 per farm. Dividing the total by the number of farm workers, we have a total product of $730 for each of them. Dividing the total by the number of people who must be supported out of these products, we have $250 for each of them. This does not look like abounding wealth.

But at least a billion dollars of the total must be charged off at the very first on account of interest on the $25,000,000,000 invested in farm property. Another billion needs to be deducted to pay for seed and fertilizers. Taxes, insurance, and depreciation account for millions more. And still there is a great deduction to be made on account of duplications of value in the magnificent totals given. The enormous value of the corn crop enters into the total; so does the value of the cattle, hogs, sheep, chickens, and other animals that eat most of the corn on the farms. The oats and hay and a very large share of the root crops are fed without leaving the farms; and their value appears as an original product and again as the price of the stock that consume them. So with dairy products. They represent a very large amount; but most of this large amount has been counted in the pasture grass, the hay, and the grain and other products fed to the cows.

If all of these proper deductions are made from the magnificent total of the Secretary's estimate, still the ordinary reader is led to believe that the farmer's income is an immense net income. The ordinary reader does not realize that farm income is not all profit. When the truth is known and appreciated, the average net income of the American farmer is small—too small to permit him to live in comfort and to educate his children as they ought to be educated.

The danger in this exaggeration of the products of the farm, with the implication that the farmer is abounding in wealth, will encourage business men and laboring men in the cities to make determined efforts to beat down the prices of farm products in the belief that the farmer is getting more than his share. The truth is that the average farm income is much lower than that of the average workman in the cities, to say nothing of the much larger average of all city dwellers, including the larger number of the wealthy who own a large portion of the farms and get practically all of the profits from such farms.

R. E. THRASHER,
D. W. WORKING,
Committee on Resolutions.

This report was on motion with proper support adopted, and the secretary instructed to furnish copies to the public press, also to United States Senators and Congressmen from West Virginia, also to Secretary of Agriculture Wilson.

Correct copy from the journal.

A bill (S. 6670) to remove the charge of desertion against Peter Gannon; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GAMBLE:

A bill (S. 6671) granting an increase of pension to William S. Addington; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 6672) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Peyton (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 6673) granting a pension to James N. Ballard (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McENERY:

A bill (S. 6674) for the relief of the heirs of Phoebe Fuqua Peirce; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GORE (by request):

A bill (S. 6675) permitting homestead entries upon certain lands in the Lawton land district, Oklahoma; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. BORAH:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 81) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

JOINT HOMESTEAD ENTRY.

Mr. BURKETT introduced a bill (S. 6647) to enable two persons to make a joint homestead entry and secure a patent thereto after complying with the homestead laws as to improvement, cultivation, and time of residence, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BURKETT. It will be observed that the bill proposes a new departure in the homestead law, and that the Senate may know in just whose interest it is and the importance of the bill, I ask to have read a letter which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

OMAHA CENTRAL LABOR UNION,
Omaha, Nebr., February 10, 1910.

Hon. E. J. BURKETT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: At the last meeting of the Omaha Central Labor Union resolutions were passed instructing the following undersigned officers to make request of you to introduce the inclosed bill and to request your earnest cooperation in securing its passage.

The laboring men in the large industrial centers, where may always be found an army of unemployed, find the sentiment of "back to the land" increasing daily. But when we seek the remedy through the homestead rights, we find that the cost is absolutely prohibitive, hence the jobless must continue to remain homeless.

While this bill may be crude in its construction, yet we feel that it contains the substance of a just and remedial law which should meet with the approval of all classes of our citizens. We have conferred with Mr. D. Clem Deaver, who we consider as an authority upon such laws, and this bill, as presented, meets with his approval.

Trusting that we may receive your hearty cooperation and thanking you in advance for all favors, we remain,

Yours, fraternally,

OMAHA CENTRAL LABOR UNION.
A. J. DONAHUE, President.
JOHN POLIAN, Secretary.
LOUIS V. GUYE,
Chairman Board of Directors.

Mr. BURKETT. I move that the bill and accompanying letter be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN INDIANA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I introduce a bill to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Indiana, which I ask to be referred to the Committee on Fisheries.

I wish to state to the chairman of that committee and the Senate at this time that there is now no fish-cultural station in the State of Indiana, and our waters are better located for the purpose of a fish-hatching and fish-cultural station than those of almost any other State. We are in bad need of a fish-cultural station, and I hope the committee will consider the bill favorably.

The bill (S. 6656) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Indiana was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Fisheries.

CLAIMS OF L. A. WISMEYER AND OTHERS.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment providing for the investigation and the readjustment of the claims of L. A. Wismeyer, a licensed trader, and such other licensed traders, with the Osage Indians, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $135,000 for improving St. Michael Canal, Alaska, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for improving Lake Crescent and Dunns Creek, Florida, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for improving St. Andrews Bay, Florida, to $103,395, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for improving the Choctawhatchee River, Florida and Alabama, to $15,000, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the removal of the water hyacinth from the navigable rivers of Florida, etc., to $15,000, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DU PONT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $18,500 for improving the Leipsic River, Delaware, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $350,000 for improvements and maintenance of improvements from the mouth of the Missouri River to Fort Benton, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRAWFORD submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000,000 to secure a permanent 6-foot channel in the Missouri River between Kansas City and Sioux City, Iowa, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of War, if, in his judgment, the prices received in response to advertisement for bids for dredging Oakland Harbor, California, are not reasonable, to expend so much of the amount appropriated for the purchase or construction of a suitable dredging plant, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TALIAFERRO submitted an amendment providing for the survey of Lemon Bay to Gasparilla Sound, Florida, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment relative to the survey of St. Josephs Bay Harbor, Florida, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for improving St. Lucie Inlet, Florida, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOURNE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $300,000 for the purchase of the existing canal and locks around Willamette Falls, Oregon City, Oreg., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRIGGS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $360,000 for constructing a channel in the Delaware River from Allegheny avenue, Philadelphia, to Trenton, N. J., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for improving Arkansas River, Oklahoma, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing for the survey of the Arkansas River between Fort Smith, Ark., and Muskogee, Okla., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KEAN submitted an amendment providing for deepening the channel between South River and Old Bridge, N. J., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SIMMONS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for improving Cape Fear River above Wilmington, N. C., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

OPIUM TRAFFIC.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 377), which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State transmitting a Report on the International Opium Commission and on the Opium Problem as Seen Within the United States and Its Possessions, prepared by Mr. Hamilton Wright on behalf of the American delegates to the said commission, held at Shanghai in February, 1909. In reference to this report the Secretary of State makes certain recommendations regarding an appropriation and other legislative action, which I commend to the Congress with my approval and the request that action should be taken accordingly.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 21, 1910.

WILLIAM FRYE WHITE.

Mr. FRYE. I am obliged to be absent nearly all the time upon the Committee on Commerce, and I should like to ask the Senate for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5071) for the relief of William Frye White, owner of lots 103, 104, 105, and 106, square 754, Washington, D. C., with regard to assessment and payment of damages on account of changes of grade due to construction of the Union Station, District of Columbia.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN B. LORD.

Mr. GALLINGER. The next bill on the calendar is identical with the one that has just passed, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. It is Senate bill 2045.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 2045) for the relief of John B. Lord, owner of lot 86, square 723, Washington, D. C., with regard to assessment and payment of damages on account of changes of grade due to construction of the Union Station, District of Columbia; and the Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECLAMATION FUND.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 5705) to authorize the issue and sale of certificates of indebtedness against the reclamation fund.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the While, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CARTER. The bill has been read, certain amendments adopted, and certain amendments are pending. I ask that the remaining committee amendments be read and passed upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending amendment of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 3, after the word "maintenance," strike out all of the bill down to and including the word "begun" and the period in line 8 and insert the following words:

The certificates of indebtedness herein authorized shall be exempt from taxes or duties of the United States as well as from taxation in any form by or under state, municipal, or local authority; that the money borrowed under the authority of this act shall be expended in the completion of such feasible projects as have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior and in the construction of such extensions thereof as may, in the judgment of said Secretary, be proper and necessary to the successful and profitable operation and maintenance of the projects or to protect water rights claimed by the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended, which has been read.

Mr. KEAN. May I ask the Senator from Montana if this exemption exceeds that at the present time given to the bonds of the United States?

Mr. CARTER. The exemption, as I understand it, is identical with the exemption provided in the bond issue during the Spanish-American war. The Senator probably has in mind the question of the exemption of the interest from the operations of the corporation tax. It does not refer to the question of interest, but merely exempts the indebtedness.

Mr. KEAN. Would the interest on these certificates be exempt under the corporation-tax law?

Mr. CARTER. I am not prepared to answer that question. I presume not, if the interest on bonds is not so exempt.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. FLINT. I should like to have the amendment as amended read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will again read the pending amendment as it has been amended.

The Secretary again read the amendment as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FLINT. I offer an amendment to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. An amendment to the amendment?

Mr. FLINT. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California offers an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FLINT. I offered an amendment to the pending amendment the other day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is an amendment which has been acted upon and adopted.

Mr. FLINT. Was the amendment which I offered the other day adopted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair does not recollect that the Senator from California offered an amendment. The Chair recollects, however, that the Senator from California made some suggestion, but the Chair did not understand that the Senator put it in the form of an amendment.

Mr. FLINT. It is that about which I wanted to be clear. The question was asked me when I suggested the amendment whether I offered it, and I said that I intended to offer it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will now state the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 3, line 13, before the word "project," it is proposed to strike out the word "feasible," and after the word "Interior," in line 14, to strike out the remainder of the amendment as follows:

And in the construction of such extensions thereof as may in the judgment of said Secretary be proper and necessary to the successful and profitable operation and maintenance of the projects, or to protect water rights claimed by the United States.

Mr. FLINT. As a further amendment, I desire to offer, after the word "projects," in line 13, to insert "and portions of projects."

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, will the Senator let me ask him what is meant by the words:

Theretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior and in the construction of such extensions thereof as may be proper and necessary to the successful and profitable operation and maintenance of the projects or to protect water rights claimed by the United States?

I have understood that the extensions referred to are essential to the maintenance of the projects which have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and that, if we strike out these extensions, the large sums of money expended for the original projects will not be profitable. It is true that these extensions, as I understand, will cost much more money than the original projects; but if the original projects can not be successful without these extensions, certainly we ought not to strike out the extensions if we are going to complete the original projects.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is right about it.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, I think the Senator is entirely mistaken. In my opinion, there is absolutely no necessity to authorize the issuance of these certificates as far as carrying on the work of the projects which have been approved. The only object in issuing these certificates of $30,000,000 at this time is to finish these projects at an early day. It is estimated by the Secretary of the Interior that the $30,000,000 will finish the approved portions of the projects. I want to have the money received from these certificates limited to that purpose, and to that purpose alone. The change suggested of adding the word "extensions" makes an additional amount of $55,000,000. If we permit this bill to pass without limiting it to the approved portions of the projects we shall find ourselves committed to further extensions of $55,000,000.

As a matter of fact, there is no real necessity to have these certificates issued at this time. I believe that the irrigation work as carried on by the Reclamation Service would be better if we did not approve this scheme of carrying on these extensions by the issuance of these certificates——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. FLINT. Just a moment and I shall finish—for the reason, Mr. President, that we have land which is in condition to be irrigated that has not yet been taken up. There is no demand by reason of settlement to have this work further pushed on. The only reason that this work should be pushed is that in some of the projects there have been settlers located beyond the line where they can irrigate. The result of it is that they now ask Congress not to carry out the original plan of having this work go along slowly and carefully, but all of a sudden an expenditure of $30,000,000 is asked to do all this work at one time. If we do not limit it to those projects which have been approved, which will satisfy the people who are now calling for this work to be immediately done, but leave it so that this money can go into extensions, and have Representatives and Senators importuning the Secretary of the Interior to approve these extensions, we shall find ourselves in a very dangerous position if we permit that action to be taken. Now, I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the Senator from California makes a somewhat astounding statement, namely, that the leaving of the provision in this section with reference to extensions will involve an additional expenditure of $55,000,000.

Mr. FLINT. May involve.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the Senator is entirely mistaken about that. The language in the provision is that the expenditures shall be made for "the completion of such feasible projects as have been heretofore approved"——

Mr. FLINT. Now, wait a minute, if the Senator will allow me, because I want to be clear about that. That amounts to about $30,000,000, does it not?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That amounts to about $30,000,000; but, in addition to that, it is provided:

> Such extensions thereof as may be proper and necessary to the successful and profitable operation and maintenance of the projects or to protect water rights claimed by the United States.

Mr. FLINT. That amounts to $55,000,000.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; the Senator is in error about that. All of the extensions which have been tentatively approved, which are contemplated to be made at some time in the future, but which may never be made, or, at least, a large portion of which may never be made—all of them together involve an expenditure of about $55,000,000; but this bill does not contemplate that all of those extensions shall be completed, but only such extensions as may be proper and necessary to the successful and profitable operation of the projects themselves. It is limited to that class of extensions, and I undertake to say that they will be comparatively small in number. They will not involve the expenditure of anything like $55,000,000; perhaps not the tenth part of $55,000,000. The bill contemplates that the Secretary of the Interior, with this money, shall first of all complete the feasible projects which have been heretofore approved, and then, in addition to those projects, that he shall construct only such portions of the extensions as may be both proper and necessary to the successful and profitable operation of the main projects. So it seems to me that the Senator from California is clearly in error when he says that it involves the expenditure of the entire $55,000,000.

Mr. FLINT. The Senator, in my opinion, does not take the correct view of this bill as it has now been framed. We both agreed in committee that, if it were possible, this money should be limited to the approved portions of the projects. Now, they have changed the language of the bill so as to include extensions to projects which they may desire to complete which could not be completed under the bill as originally worded. They have extended it to cover just that to which we objected, and that was the extensions.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from California will agree with me that the expenditure of $55,000,000 contemplates the construction of all the extensions. Am I correct in that?

Mr. FLINT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the language of the bill contemplate all extensions? If so, then what is the purpose of limiting the provision by the amendment?

Mr. FLINT. Limiting the provision?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Limiting the provision by the language "such extensions as may be proper and necessary to the successful and profitable operation." Does the Senator understand, when the class of extensions is designated by the bill, that that includes all of them?

Mr. FLINT. I think so, so far as I am concerned, and I think the Senator from Utah agrees with me. I think we are in just this position, that we might frankly admit that of this amount $14,000,000 will be spent in the State of Washington, seven or eight million dollars in the State of Wyoming, and the balance of the money in the State of Montana. I am perfectly willing that this money shall be so expended, and to vote for it, provided it will complete these irrigation projects, if that is what Congress intends by it; but I object, Mr. President, to voting to issue $30,000,000 in certificates, when the real intention of it is to spend $85,000,000 on these various projects.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then the Senator from California thinks when the bill says there shall be constructed only such extensions as may be necessary and proper to the successful and profitable operation of the project that it means all the extensions?

Mr. FLINT. No. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In other words, that when the bill itself specifies a portion of the projects or a portion of the extensions it means all the extensions?

Mr. FLINT. It does not mean extensions, for the reason that the extensions to which the Senator refers have already been approved. It is stated in a letter from the Interior Department that the extensions of projects amounting to $55,000,000 have been approved; that they are feasible; that they are necessary; that they are proper, or they would not have been approved. So we are in a position that the words mean nothing there, because, as we have already been notified by the department itself which has charge of this work, they have approved these very projects and these extensions.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Utah understands precisely the contrary—that these extensions have not been approved; that they are only being tentatively considered by the department. The communication which the Senator from California had on his desk the other day shows upon its face that these extensions embraced in the $55,000,000 have not been approved at all.

Mr. FLINT. If the Senator will read the letter, he will find just what it does say. The department considers that they have approved this work.

Mr. President, it seems to me we should provide in this bill for the work that we started in to complete. If we do not, we will find ourselves committed indirectly for $85,000,000 for irrigation projects instead of $30,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from California says very frankly that he does not consider this bill necessary, and I judge from the amendment he offered that he wishes to defeat the bill, as his amendment would certainly defeat a material portion of it, and a portion that is perhaps the most worthy. The fifty-odd million dollars of extensions, of which the Senator speaks, were referred to in a list sent in here as being all of the proposed extensions to all of the projects heretofore considered. There was another list of work, amounting to about $30,000,000, which came with the information that at a certain time, when the list happened to be called for—without stating what purpose it was to be used for—there had been approved, as to surveys and so forth, projects involving some thirty-odd million dollars, and that there were contemplated extensions amounting in all to some $55,000,000. In that list there were some projects named that are not even commenced, so far as dams and ditches proper are concerned, but merely the roads and the railroad grades over which they expect to transport the material with which to build them. But the survey has been approved for the whole work. There are other cases where the major portion of the work has been completed, but extensions indispensable to the success of the projects are yet unapproved as to final surveys and alignment.

To adopt the amendment of the Senator from California would have the effect of compelling the expenditure of this money on the approved portions of projects already begun, without the power to add the other indispensable extensions.

I have in mind one of the projects that is now under construction. There is a dam that impounds more water than any other dam in the world, and there is only one dam in contemplation that will impound more. It has cost about a million and a quarter dollars, and it has been approved. Away down in another State there have been approved certain ditches, and settlement is being made under them and water distributed from the dam 200 or more miles away. There is one body of land of two hundred and fifty-odd thousand acres——

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BORAH in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. WARREN. I did not hear the Senator. If he wishes to interrupt me, I yield.

Mr. FLINT. I was going to ask the Senator if what he referred to was the Goshen Hole project?

Mr. WARREN. I am now alluding to the Pathfinder Dam. I have not come to the Goshen Hole. The Senator has not permitted me to get that far.

Mr. FLINT. I wanted to ask the Senator when he reached the Goshen Hole project, for which he wants part of the money expended, whether the engineers reported upon that as being a feasible and proper project?

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will wait, I will come to that. Does the Senator wish to have the Senate understand that it has not been reported upon as feasible?

Mr. FLINT. As a questionable project.

Mr. WARREN. Yes. So is every project, until finally approved, a questionable project in a certain sense.

In the reservoir I have mentioned the water is impounded; the dam has been filled, and water is there now. Away down the river, below this dam and between it and a point where water is now being delivered, is one body of land alone of a quarter of a million acres. The engineers have gone over the land and the ditch line to connect it with the river, and have reported it as a feasible project, but they believe that they can find a cheaper route and a better ditch line, and hence that part of that project has not been approved. There are other smaller parts of the project all along the route, and the water is already provided and in the reservoir mentioned. But the water is useless and the dam useless until the water can be diverted and distributed.

To adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from California would be to make it impossible to spend a dollar of that $30,000,000 in conducting that water onto any of the large body of land mentioned, or a dozen other smaller bodies of land along the stream, it being remembered all the time that the Pathfinder Dam is away up in the mountains; that the water being delivered now goes to land 200 miles or more below, and that in the 200 miles intervening there are quantities of land at various points to which this water is to be applied after it is let down from the dam and taken from the river by means of sundry diversion dams and ditches.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I understand the Senator has explained what "extensions" mean, and now I think I understand the term. In other words, if it takes $30,000,000 to complete the present projects and the necessary ditches to carry the water where the land is located, they would be called "extensions." If the simple project is completed and the extensions are not made to where the land is located, I should think that the original project would be a failure without the extension. As I understand, it will take $30,000,000 to complete the projects which have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and it will take about fifty or fifty-five millions for the whole work; that is, to complete the projects and make the extensions.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that the list of approved projects was not furnished especially for the purpose for which it is being quoted here. When that list was called for by the Secretary of the Interior, he asked the Director of the Reclamation Service, who was absent at the time, and it was taken up by his assistant, for a list of those projects which had received official approval. It was furnished and sent to us in that way. It includes, as I said before, some projects scarcely begun; but the Secretary expected, and the Reclamation Service expected, that if certificates or bonds were issued the money would be used to the best advantage in finishing those projects and making such extensions as are absolutely necessary to make profitable and safe, as to water rights, and so forth, the projects already partly or wholly built and to make inhabitable the land to be irrigated by them.

There are two propositions. One is for relief where the settlers have gone on to the public land with the promise, as they thought, that water would soon arrive; and, through the delay of the Government, the settlement time is being exhausted and they are starving to death for the want of water. That is one side of the proposition. Another side of it is where there have been taken from the heart of the country great bodies of land, withheld—and I think properly—from settlement until the water arrived, so that water and land can be used together by the settlers. Now, in this last-named condition we seek to utilize water already conserved by making further diversion dams and ditches—not expensive—to make useful the projects where large amounts have been already expended.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DIXON in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question. The Senator does not understand, I presume, that the estimate of $30,000,000 for approved projects, as stated in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, binds him to expend the money as he lays it down in his letter. That is simply a basis of his estimate; but this bill gives him power, as I understand as a member of the committee, to divert the funds from any particular project to any of the others which are approved and which are found to be feasible.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. So that he can use the $30,000,000 on any one or more of the approved projects which require $30,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. He can use it, as the Senator from Oregon suggests, under the bill as the committee have reported it. The only trouble about the amendment of the Senator from California is that those portions of projects that may not have been fully and finally approved at that time would be cut out.

If we had asked the Secretary to prepare a list of projects involving an expenditure of $30,000,000 that were most necessary for the immediate future, and included that in our bill, we would be on a safe basis; but neither the Reclamation Service, nor the Secretary of the Interior, nor the committee understands that when that list was made up it was made up under the kind of restriction the Senator from California suggests.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. FLINT. So far as I am concerned, I will be entirely willing to have this matter referred to the Secretary of the Interior or the Director of the Reclamation Service, and have him state just what projects this money should be expended upon, and that no other projects shall be approved until such projects are completed.

Mr. WARREN. Well, why does the Senator object to the bill, then? This bill, as reported from the committee, is intended to provide just that.

Mr. FLINT. I am entirely willing to do that, but I am not willing to make it appear that it is the intention of having more projects added to the already great burden, to have settlers go out there, and then have the Government put in the position of having to make another bond issue.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator from Wyoming will permit me, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from California, I desire to say that the Secretary of the Interior in a communication to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, when these very measures were under consideration, answered that very question. He said in that letter, referring to the letter to the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER]:

> In the letter of December 30, 1909, above referred to, the estimates have been somewhat arbitrarily divided into two columns, the first of which is called "approved portion." This includes those items of a project which have been approved in more or less general form by the Secretary, or which are a necessary outgrowth of the approval of the project. As a whole, no hard and fast line can be drawn in the matter, because of the fact that in the evolution of these projects and the large volume of correspondence regarding general plans and details there is a direct or implied approval of many items which subsequently may be a proper subject for reconsideration.

In other words, the Secretary of the Interior, when he addressed the Irrigation Committee of the Senate, did not intend to be bound by the lines there laid down. It was simply an outline, as I understand, of the question of the general policy of the approved plan. I inquire if the Senator did not so understand it?

Mr. WARREN. I did. Of course, Mr. President, it is like crying "bogy man" to talk about this bill running us into a much larger expenditure. There is nothing of that kind apprehended by those who favor this measure nor those who propose to execute the law under it. The fact is that every dollar that goes out comes back to the Government eventually in another way.

The reason why this thirty million loan is necessary is because, in starting to do the work, under pressure from various States, through their Members of Congress and Senators, and without the knowledge that they now have as to the cost of construction, more projects were commenced than could be finished with the money then available, or that could be furnished as fast as needed, through the ordinary sale of public lands. There have been up to the present time careful estimates made. Certain projects have been finished, others are lying in certain stages of advancement, and we are at a pass where we can not get proper returns from the money already invested unless we have the early expenditure of about the amount that this bill asks for as a loan. With that amount of money there need never be another dollar asked from the Government except that which has been provided for by prior legislation, unless, indeed, the Government shall go on and strip the public lands from every resource it has, which it has in some measure been doing, and seems intent upon doing now.

Of course, if we shall pass a law that no coal land can be sold; that no land of this or that or the other kind can be sold; and that it must be rented out and paid for year by year in royalties, it will delay and it will make the irrigation fund smaller and retard the completion of all the projects that have been commenced. But with this amount of money for the projects proper and for such extensions as are absolutely necessary to supplement the irrigation fund and make it available, the work can go ahead and present projects can be finished.

Having drafted the bill in that way, to amend it as the Senator from California wishes us to amend it would be to make the bill valueless. The amendment should not be adopted, and I hope the Senate will so vote.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not see how the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT] can put the construction upon language which he is putting upon the language of this bill. So far as the original provision of the bill is concerned, as contained in the portion of the part stricken out upon page 3, it was entirely satisfactory to me; but there was a reason why this other amendment was attached to that language, and it seems, after consideration, that it was a good reason.

Now, this is the language as it is contained in the amendment here:

> That the money borrowed under the authority of this act shall be expended in the completion of such feasible projects as have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Now, such projects as have been approved and are in course of construction are the projects upon which this money must be expended, provided one other condition is added, which, it seems to me, is a reasonable and sensible one:

> And in the construction of such extensions thereof.

Extensions of what? Not extensions of other and new projects, but extensions of projects which already, at the present time, have the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. Just one question, so that I can get the understanding of the Senator. In the letter of December 31 from the Secretary of the Interior I notice that the approved portion of the Payette-Boise project is $2,337,000 and the extension is $10,000,000. I am speaking of this only as an illustration, as there are other similar cases. But what I wanted to learn of the Senator is this: Under this amendment is it not possible to spend a part of the $30,000,000 on the extension of the Payette-Boise project?

Mr. BORAH. I do not so understand, unless said extensions are necessary to the successful and profitable operation thereof.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand they can; and if it is not the case, then, by all means, take the words that were stricken out of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. If the Boise-Payette——

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want the Senator to understand that I say it is not proper, perhaps, under the circumstances, to spend money upon the extension of that particular project, but I do want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that there is nothing in this bill to prevent the Secretary of the Interior from spending $10,000,000 if it is necessary upon the extension of that particular project.

Mr. BORAH. I disagree entirely with the Senator from Utah on that proposition, for the reason that the language does limit the Secretary, in using the money upon these extensions, to the instances in which it is necessary——

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. To the successful and profitable operation. That is, to cover conditions which are in existence where they have completed a certain portion of it and approved of it, but where it is unsuccessful and unprofitable without extension.

So far as the Boise-Payette proposition is concerned, if it is profitable and successful when this $2,000,000 is expended, the Secretary of the Interior would not be permitted under any fair construction of that language to use that money in that way, and there is no intention, I presume, to do so.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator again that I made the statement "if it were necessary," and I say so now. Under the wording of this bill, if it becomes necessary to make the project profitable, the Secretary under this bill could spend $10,000,000 upon this project.

Mr. BORAH. If it were necessary for the successful——

Mr. SMOOT. And profitable.

Mr. BORAH. And profitable operation of the project. But if it is not so, then he would not.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not discussing that question. I am discussing the question as to whether the Secretary is authorized to thus use the money.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator from Utah will bear with me for a moment, I suggest that it would never be necessary, or it would never be proper, under this bill to do so except in instances where the original project could not be put in successful operation until the extension was made. That is as plain as the path to the country schoolhouse.

We can not take away from the Secretary of the Interior all discretion, all judgment, in the operation of these projects, and we can not take away from him all discretion as to the manner in which the money shall be invested, if he is going to make it a successful and profitable operation. We are not to assume that the Secretary of the Interior will undertake to get around the language, because this is the language of the Secretary of the Interior himself practically, and it is his desire to be given such latitude, and such latitude only, as will enable him to make successful the investments already made.

Certainly, we do not desire to place about him such restrictions as will make it impossible for him to make successful and profitable the operations which are now in course of construction. This language is placed there for the sole purpose of what? Of enabling the Secretary of the Interior to make them successful propositions; not to build a dam and let it stand there without benefiting the settler; not to build a portion of a project and let it stand without helping anyone; but to enable him to make such an extension as will benefit the people who want to use the land and who have settled on the land.

Just one word more and I will conclude. It seems to me we are unduly technical here, in view of the fact that no one can possibly suffer by reason of the expenditure of a few dollars in some place where, in the judgment of some, it ought not to be expended. Why? Because every single dollar of this money must be paid back by the settler.

So long as we are building homes, reclaiming arid lands of the Government and making them produce, so long as the settler is paying every dollar of that expenditure, it seems to me, if we believe in conservation, now is the time to put it in practical operation. We have had a vast amount of discussion about conservation in this country in the last six months; most of it in the air—a large part of it in the newspapers. We now have an opportunity to make it practicable, to bring it home to the men engaged in the actual struggle for existence. He asks not a dollar of the American Senate, but simply an opportunity to invest this money and pay it back himself. The settlers have been invited from all parts of the United States upon this land. They have gone there and built and are building their homes, and if ever we could afford to be liberal, it is when they ask simply the means by which they may make that home successful and profitable.

If there was any possibility of our losing any part of this money we might take the precaution which is suggested, but there is no probability, there is not even a possibility of it; and I say therefore that when there is in this bill the means by which the Secretary of the Interior can make all these operations successful, that language ought to stay there. If there is any lack of confidence in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior upon that matter, then to whom can we intrust it? Certainly he knows more about it than anyone else, cooperating with the Reclamation Service itself, and some one must exercise some judgment upon the subject.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the bill now pending has been rendered necessary by the improvident approval of construction projects. Probably Representatives and Senators are quite as much to blame as is the department or the service. The original law contemplated that only such ventures should be undertaken as the money at hand would complete. But in the beginning an unusual allowance was made in the Territories to the south. The whole accumulation of the fund was there absorbed, and construction in other parts of the country proceeded from customary or current receipts. Naturally the Senators and Representatives from States contributing largely to this fund desired that projects of a feasible character within their respective States should be given appropriate attention. The insistence in this direction led to the approval of projects in practically all the States embraced within the purview of the original act, one exception only being that of Oklahoma, where it was claimed no feasible project could be found.

It thus happened that in the approval and simultaneous commencement of many projects a large surface was opened up for construction. Very important and very extensive head works have been constructed in connection with many of these projects.

I have in mind one dam in Arizona which, when completed, will cost over $4,000,000, and it will be completed this coming autumn. Another, a dam in the State of Wyoming, at the headwaters of the River Platte, intended to impound waters for the use of both Wyoming and Nebraska, has cost one million and a quarter dollars. Another dam, on the Shoshone River in the State of Wyoming, has cost about an equal amount. Thus I could proceed to specify cases where great head works have been completed, but distributing systems are needed to make the water available for the use of the waiting settler.

It is true, as the Senator from California says, that in the course of time the normal receipts from this fund, aggregating about $7,000,000 per year, would construct these distributing systems. But in the meantime the settler, patiently waiting, will be worn out before the water comes down the ditch. In the meantime the $49,000,000 invested in these head works will be wasting away, because the water impounded is not being used, but the maintenance charge still continues, and interest, moreover, is being lost.

In the presence of this kind of a situation it seemed to the department, it seemed to the President of the United States, it seemed to the Committee on Irrigation of the Senate that it was the part of wise and prudent policy to permit certificates to be issued, payable out of the reclamation fund, to the end that we might at the moment secure an amount of money necessary to economically and properly complete this work heretofore begun. That is what this measure contemplates and proposes. It does not call for a dollar from the Treasury of the United States. It contemplates that every dollar of this money shall be paid out of the reclamation fund, including the interest, of course.

The Committee on Irrigation passed during the vacation of Congress over 34 of these projects. We found waiting settlers everywhere—honest, upright, decent men and women—who had gone in in good faith, believing that the Government of the United States, which never fails, would live up to its professions, and upon that belief they have settled upon the arid plains extending from the Canadian border to the Mexican line. We found in looking into the faces of those expectant people that the Government had a duty to perform in order to repair a mistake which had been made in attempting too much work at once. The result of that conviction is this bill, which proposes the issuance of certificates of indebtedness payable out of this fund.

The Senator from California suggests that there are large extensions to be made. Yes; in the sense in which this Capitol will be extended and completed. The Capitol has been in course of construction for over one hundred years, and this building is not completed at this hour. Changes are being made, readjustments are being made, and so it will continue probably to the end of time. Extensions will be made; some canals will be abandoned and others will be constructed upon these reclamation projects after we are all dead and gone.

But, Mr. President, in a practical sense this bill can not be misunderstood by the administration officers. It is the plain, distinct purpose of the measure to enable the department to complete the projects heretofore begun; and the committee, out of an abundance of caution and in thorough sympathy and accord with the Secretary of the Interior, forestalled the undertaking of any additional projects, for the present at least, by adding a section to the bill, which provides:

SEC. 3. That hereafter no irrigation projects contemplated by said act of June 17, 1902, shall be begun unless and until the same shall have been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and approved by the direct order of the President of the United States.

We by and through this section put a stop here and now to any new projects unless the Secretary recommends and the President also approves.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CARTER. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if it would not be better for all the States interested in these reclamation projects to provide for a $50,000,000 issue at the present time, and then have it distinctly understood that the money shall be applied only to the projects that are under way? I believe if that were done, with the receipts from the sale of public lands and perhaps such small payments as may be made upon projects already completed, we could finish every project mentioned in the Secretary's letter, and there would not necessarily be another demand made upon Congress. I feel positive, with the figures I have in my possession, that $50,000,000 will clean it up entirely. I will ask the Senator if he would not be in favor of such a proposition.

Mr. CARTER. I would favor such a proposition if it were necessary.

Let me say to the Senator that while the receipts from the public lands and the payment of water charges amount to only $7,000,000 this year, it must be borne in mind that on the vast investment of $49,000,000 made we have to-day seven hundred thousand and odd acres of land reclaimed, and in some instances this land is in such condition that it can not be settled upon with any degree of confidence by the incoming home seekers.

My judgment—and I announce it with full knowledge of the fact that it will be verified or refuted by the course of events—is that the receipts of the fund from the sale of the public lands and the charges paid by water users will amount during the next five years to an average of $15,000,000 per year. When this $30,000,000 shall have been expended, we will have 3,000,000 acres of land under cultivation instead of something like 700,000, as at present. With the five years of clear receipts, if only at $12,000,000 per year, we will receive $60,000,000 in the normal course of collections, plus the $30,000,000 borrowed, which will make $90,000,000 available within the next five years.

I do not deem it wise to pay interest on money that is not needed——

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that it is not necessary to issue the certificates if they are not needed; and I believe that the Senator is overestimating the receipts. I want to be, in this particular instance, perfectly safe, and I suggest that the authorization to issue $50,000,000 of certificates will make us perfectly safe. I believe if we allow only $30,000,000, we will fall short of finishing these projects, and it does seem to me that to make it $50,000,000 would be the proper thing to do under conditions as they exist.

Mr. CARTER. With the current receipts and $30,000,000 available in the next two years, I am perfectly satisfied that construction will proceed as fast as it can economically. The allowance of a very large sum, or any sum in excess of the actual necessity, might lead to a demand for the issuance of certificates and the extension of works beyond what prudence would really dictate. I believe it wiser to adhere to the sum fixed by the calculations of the Reclamation Service, the recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior, and the President of the United States than to go out upon a shoreless sea to name larger sums than those which have been prescribed as necessary.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] and I disagree slightly, it seems to me. He states that all these projects can be finished within a comparatively few years if there is no issue of certificates. Upon that we agree. Second, he states that the object of issuing the certificates is to complete the irrigation projects that have been commenced, so that those who have settled upon the land may obtain water and go on with their farming operations. To that I agree. If he would stop there, we would be in entire harmony. But he does not. He adds to his original bill the language that this money may be used for extensions to the portion of the projects that have been approved. There is where I disagree with him.

It seems to me that everything desired by the Senator can be accomplished by limiting the expenditure of this money to the portions of projects which have been approved, where the people have settled.

Mr. CARTER. While the Senator is stating our understanding, I should like to be a party to the understanding.

Mr. FLINT. That is always important.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator avers that the Senator from Montana insisted upon this amendment relating to extensions. That amendment, as the Senator well knows, was accepted by the Senator from Montana in the course of a line of very difficult adjustments.

Mr. FLINT. I accept that correction. That is right.

Mr. CARTER. The language of the bill as originally presented seemed to me to cover the case to a dot. It read:

The certificates authorized by this act shall be exempt from taxes in any form. * * * That all money borrowed under authority of this act shall be devoted exclusively to the completion of work on projects heretofore begun.

I think that covered the case, and that any other language simply confuses it.

Mr. FLINT. I am entirely satisfied with it.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from California has directly said at every meeting of the committee that he was not satisfied with it except with words to make it apply only to such parts of projects as were already approved.

Mr. FLINT. I agree with the statement of the Senator that I did insist that the correct way was to limit it to portions of projects approved. But sooner than to have this bill pass with the extensions added to it—to my mind $55,000,000 added to it—I would be willing to vote for the bill as originally prepared by the Senator, limiting it to projects already begun.

I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a statement showing the acreage under irrigation and certain data in connection with the various projects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Irrigable area of land under all projects, acreage for which water is now available, acreage covered by water-right applications or contracts, and balance not covered by applications, as shown by project records.

The estimated total irrigated acreage in the United States in 1909, including rice irrigation, is 12,000,000.
The estimated total cost of construction of irrigation systems in 1909 is $177,000,000, including $50,000,000 investment in federal works.
Above estimate computed on basis of census report, 1902 (Bulletin No. 16), and from data supplied by reports of state engineers.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, if I thought the construction put upon this proposed amendment by the Senator from California was correct, and if I thought the amendment suggested by him would cure the difficulty, I would most cheerfully support it. But I think he is incorrect upon both propositions. The confusion, as it seems to me, arises from not distinguishing between two classes of extensions. First we have the project itself, and the bill requires that that project shall have been approved—not only that it shall have been approved, but that it shall be a feasible project—before any part of this borrowed money can be applied to its completion. Then it provides that certain extensions, describing them specifically—stating the exact character of the extensions—may be completed in addition to the projects themselves.

Now, these extensions are of two kinds: First, the extensions which are necessary to render the original work profitable, necessary additions to the original project; and, second, additions which are not so necessary, but which are contemplated as separate and distinct units hereafter to be made. For example, that is the character of the extension to be made in the Payette-Boise project, as I understand it. The $10,000,000 which has been referred to that may be expended some time upon that extension is to build an extension which is a separate and distinct unit, which is not necessary to make the original project profitable, is neither proper nor necessary for that purpose, but may be added hereafter, constituting a part of the project, but in a sense a complete and distinct unit that depends upon itself for its profit.

In that view the Senator from California says he would be satisfied with the original provision of the bill. I should not be satisfied with it. The original provision of the bill is—

> That all money borrowed under authority of this act shall be devoted exclusively to the completion of work on projects heretofore begun.

Now, take the Boise-Payette project. The work on that project has been heretofore begun. The additions to it, the extensions to the project, whether they may be considered as necessary to its profitable operation or whether they are of the character that I have described, separate and distinct units, are still parts of the project, and the project itself has been heretofore begun. So if we leave the original provision of the bill in operation, "to be devoted exclusively to the completion of work on projects heretofore begun," that clearly and definitely would permit the expenditure of this money to be made upon all extensions, whether they were necessary to the profitable operation of the project or were separate and distinct units.

The amendment proposes to limit the expenditure of the money in such a way that, first, the feasible projects which have already been approved shall be completed; and, second, only such portions of the extensions to those projects as may be necessary and proper to the successful and profitable operation thereof shall be undertaken.

It does seem to me that an analysis of the language makes it perfectly clear that if we are not to provide that these projects, including every contemplated extension, shall be included, we must insert the limited provision included in the proposed amendment. That is the understanding of the Secretary of the Interior. Let me read very briefly from the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House. On page 41 he says:

> In the letter of December 30, 1909, above referred to, the estimates have been somewhat arbitrarily divided into two columns, the first of which is called "approved portion." This includes those items of a project which have been approved in more or less general form by the Secretary, or which are a necessary outgrowth of the approval of the project. As a whole, no hard and fast line can be drawn in the matter, because of the fact that in the evolution of these projects and the large volume of correspondence regarding general plans and details there is a direct or implied approval of many items which subsequently may be proper subjects for reconsideration.

Thus far he has been speaking about the approved projects or the approved portions of the projects, and he says that even as to those they may be subject to reconsideration and a part of them cut out. Now, he comes to the extensions, and I read:

> Under the heading of "extensions" are somewhat arbitrarily included those items of a project which are still subject to study and consideration of alternative plans, involving the satisfactory determination of many questions with difficult physical, legal, and engineering problems. There are thus involved in these extensions a large number of matters for future discussion.

So the Secretary of the Interior clearly distinguishes between these two classes of work. It seems to me that the very object which the Senator from California says he has in view by his proposed amendment will be defeated.

Mr. FLINT. May I ask the Senator from Utah a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. In this letter one of the projects referred to in Idaho, for instance, is the Minidoka project. The approved portion of the Minidoka project is $650,000. The extension is $5,500,000. If the Secretary of the Interior should deem that to be, in the language of the bill, proper and necessary to the successful and profitable operation and maintenance of the project, a part of this $30,000,000 may be expended on that project.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly it could, if the Secretary of the Interior deems that it comes within the provisions of the bill.

Mr. FLINT. On the Payette-Boise project the approved portion is $2,337,000, and the extension is $10,000,000. So $10,000,000 of this $30,000,000 could be used for that purpose if the Secretary should think proper, could it not?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is entirely correct, but I would say that under this bill the Secretary of the Interior would not undertake to do any such thing, because as I understand the situation, and that is particularly so with the Payette-Boise project, the extension included within the $10,000,000 is a separate and distinct unit in itself, not necessary to put in operation nor to render the project itself profitable. It may be constructed, and when it is constructed it will be a separate and distinct unit, and, although a part of the project, it will be operated and be profitable in and of itself without reference to the original project itself.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course in making the statement I do not reflect upon the Secretary of the Interior, but the Secretary could not put that construction, as stated by the Senator, upon either one of those projects without being dishonest in his interpretation of this language. It would be impossible for him to do so unless it is necessary in order that the project may be made successful and profitable. If such extensions are separate and distinct from any proposition of making the present projects successful and profitable, it would be absolutely impossible for the Secretary of the Interior to put an interpretation upon it with any honest motive of arriving at a just conclusion as to what this language means.

Mr. FLINT. I am glad to hear the Senator make that statement, but I am sorry to say that I do not agree with him. I am perfectly willing that the $30,000,000 shall be paid out and expended to carry on the work of these projects where people are settled, but——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. FLINT. If the Senator will permit me, I find other projects with extensions that, in one instance in Washington, run to $14,000,000, and in Nebraska and Wyoming to $6,000,000. If this money is expended on those extensions, then we are placing ourselves in a position where the $30,000,000 will not do that which is contemplated, and that is to give the settler his home and give it to him immediately.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me that the argument of the Senator from California is based entirely upon a lack of judgment and integrity of purpose of the Secretary of the Interior in interpreting this language, because he is not permitted to use the money for these extensions except upon certain conditions, and those conditions do not obtain with reference to any project which the Senator has seen fit to name. The Secretary of the Interior certainly would not be presumed to be going ahead in contravention of the plain language of the law. Otherwise we had better require a bond for the faithful performance of the act which we pass.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, without undertaking to discuss the merits of the bill, of which I am in favor, I will suggest that there are certain serious considerations with reference to the manner in which money is to be borrowed and the kind of obligations which are to be issued by the Government. I ask the Senator from Montana if he would be willing to let the bill go over with a view of having the Committee on Finance, without having the bill referred to them, consider the question of suggesting a change in the method of borrowing the money? A report or an amendment can be brought in within a day or two. The suggestion is not for the purpose of delaying or defeating the bill, but to bring to the attention of the Senator from Montana and the Senate forms of obligations which I think are better than those suggested in the bill as it now stands.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island that the consideration of that feature will take a couple of days, I have no objection to the bill going over for the present, unless some Senator desires to address the Senate upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be laid temporarily aside.

Mr. CARTER. A Senator, a member of the committee, suggests the propriety of disposing of the amendments at this time.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not object to that.

Mr. CARTER. I ask that the amendments may be disposed of.

Mr. KEAN. I think the whole measure had better be disposed of at once.

Mr. CARTER. I presume there is nothing further to suggest concerning the amendments.

Mr. FLINT. If the Senator will permit the bill to go over, as the Senator from Idaho seems to be of the opinion that the bill as drafted will not permit the expenditure of this money for extensions, and that is the object I am desirous of accomplishing, it may be that we can agree upon language that will be satisfactory to myself.

Mr. CARTER. In view of that situation, let the whole measure go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will go over.

SAFETY APPLIANCES ON RAILROADS.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5702) to supplement an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads."

Mr. ALDRICH. Is that the accident bill?

Mr. KEAN. No; this is the bill reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 6, after the word "ladders," to insert "Provided, That in the loading of long commodities, requiring more than one car, the hand brakes may be omitted on all save one of the cars thus combined," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That on and after July 1, 1911, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to haul, or permit to be hauled or used on its line any car subject to the provisions of this act not equipped with appliances provided for in this act, to wit: All cars must be equipped with secure sill steps and efficient hand brakes; all cars requiring secure ladders and secure running boards shall be equipped with such ladders and running boards, and all cars having ladders shall also be equipped with secure hand holds or grab irons on their roofs at the tops of such ladders: Provided, That in the loading of long commodities, requiring more than one car, the hand brakes may be omitted on all save one of the cars thus combined.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 11, after the word "after," to insert "notice and;" in line 15, after the word "ninety-three" to strike out "as amended April 1, 1896;" in line 24, after the word "after," to insert "notice and;" and at the end of the section, after the word "act," to insert "and said commission shall have authority, after notice and hearing as aforesaid, to modify or change the standard fixed by existing law for the standard height of draw bars and to fix the time within which such modification or change shall become effective and obligatory," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That within six months from the passage of this act the Interstate Commerce Commission, after notice and hearing, shall designate the number, dimensions, location, and manner of application of the appliances provided for by section 2 of this act and section 4 of the act of March 2, 1893, and shall give notice of such designation to all common carriers subject to the provisions of this act by such means as the commission may deem proper, and thereafter said number, location, dimensions, and manner of application as designated by said commission shall remain as the standards of equipment to be used on all cars subject to the provisions of this act, unless changed by an order of said Interstate Commerce Commission, to be made after notice and full hearing and for good cause shown; and failure to comply with any such requirement of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be subject to a like penalty as failure to comply with any requirement of this act: Provided, That the Interstate Commerce Commission may, upon full hearing and for good cause, extend the period within which any common carrier shall comply with the provisions of this section with respect to the equipment of cars actually in service upon the date of the passage of this act, and said commission shall have authority, after notice and hearing as aforesaid, to modify or change the standard fixed by existing law for the standard height of drawbars and to fix the time within which such modification or change shall become effective and obligatory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 3, line 21, after the words "eighteen hundred and ninety-six," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That where any car shall have been properly equipped as provided in this act or any of the acts mentioned herein, and such equipment shall have become defective or insecure while such car was being used by such carrier upon its line of railroad, such car may be hauled to the nearest available repair shop without liability for the penalties imposed by section 4 of this act, or in section 6 of the act of March 2, 1893, as amended by the act of April 1, 1896, if such necessary repairs can not be made except at such repair shop; but in case any injury shall be caused to any employee of such carrier by reason of such movement or hauling of such defective car, the fact that the same was being hauled pursuant to the authority of this proviso shall not constitute a defense to the liability of the carrier by reason of such injury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 4, line 12, after the word "That," to insert "except that the movement of a defective car within the limits specified in the proviso in section 4 may be made without incurring a penalty, but shall in all other respects be unlawful;" and in line 22, after the word "and," where it occurs the second time, to insert "except as aforesaid," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That, except that the movement of a defective car within the limits specified in the proviso in section 4 may be made without incurring a penalty, but shall in all other respects be unlawful, nothing in this act shall be held or construed to relieve any common carrier, the Interstate Commerce Commission, or any United States attorney from any of the provisions, powers, duties, liabilities, or requirements of said act of March 2, 1893, as amended by the acts of April 1, 1896, and March 2, 1903; and, except as aforesaid, all of the provisions, powers, duties, requirements, and liabilities of said act of March 2, 1893, as amended by the acts of April 1, 1896, and March 2, 1903, shall apply to this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to supplement and amend an act entitled 'An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads.'"

RECLAMATION FUND.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5705) to authorize the issue and sale of certificates of indebtedness against the reclamation fund.

Mr. CARTER. Let the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, that course will be followed.

GRANT OF LANDS TO RAWLINS, WYO.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 5499) to grant certain lands to the city of Rawlins, Wyo. It is a very short bill and a local matter.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, in line 4, after the word "conveying," to strike out "the south half of;" in line 5, after the word "quarter," to strike out "in" and insert "of;" and in line 7, to strike out "eighty" and insert "one hundred and sixty," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be issued patents conveying the southeast quarter of section 18, township 21 north, range 87 west of the sixth principal meridian, containing 160 acres, more or less, to the city of Rawlins, in the State of Wyoming, for the use of said city, subject to the legal rights of others, if any, upon paying $1.25 per acre and the usual fees therefor.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF JAMES MITCHELL, DECEASED.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 2429) for the relief of the estate of James Mitchell, deceased.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to issue registered bonds of the 3 per cent loan of 1908 to 1918 in favor of the estate of James Mitchell, with interest from February 1, 1901, in lieu of United States 3 per cent coupon bonds of said loan, for $100 each, Nos. 46375, 46376, 46377, 46378, and 46379.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS-METHODS COMMISSION.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 6168) creating a government business-methods commission.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. The bill has been read and there is no amendment pending, I think.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been read.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I desire to offer a few remarks upon the bill. I would not feel disposed to say anything, except for the fact that it has been more than once stated that the bill is reported unanimously from the Committee on Public Expenditures. While it is true that I have offered no objection to the report in the form of a minority report, I feel that I ought to say I had not that sympathy with the bill which one ought to have to join in a majority report. I do not know that my objection to the measure would be of any interest to anybody, except to our brethren on this side of the Chamber; but I have so definite a feeling that we are pursuing a wrong course in relation to these investigations and commissions that I am pressed by a sense of party duty to say a word about it.

I fear that we are filling the air with a dust of unnecessary suspicion against the integrity and good name of our party. We have in full blast now, at a great expense, so great as almost, in some cases, to be incredible, nearly a score of commissions, joint committees, and standing committees of one House or the other, dealing with the various business which the Government is interested in. We have immigration commissions, commissions for the reformation of banking and currency laws, and a minute form of tariff commission, either now engaged, or about to engage, on a large scale, in investigations which relate to our customs laws. We have commissions for more than a half dozen important matters that are pending before Congress.

We have investigation committees in full blast filling the public mind every day with doubts and uncertainties about the integrity of our public affairs; and I fear that this blanket proposition, turning a joint commission loose to overhaul the executive departments of the Government, will have no good effect, and while its operations are going on it will have a very adverse effect upon the public mind, at least in respect to our business reputation and conduct in times past.

I do not pretend to say that the management of our executive departments has been perfect, though I have taken a good deal of satisfaction in the last twenty-five years in showing that there is, on the whole, an integrity in the management of the executive departments that ought to be a source of pride to everybody interested in our form of government. So little has been lost by the injurious defalcation of the public officials in all the vast machinery of the Government of the United States that our success in business administration instead of being made an object of suspicion and distrust ought to be a subject of boast and congratulation to every American.

Now, what does this bill propose? It goes on the theory that there are evils in the business methods of our executive departments that are not curable by the departments themselves. I object to such a disparagement of the business capacity which has been assembled around these great executive responsibilities.

It is said that we have not adopted modern business methods in our executive departments. If that is true, it is because these departments have certain limitations which are not in the scheme of modern business. Our executive departments are not only business institutions, but there is a cheerful sense in which they are also political institutions. Our methods of selecting civil employees and our methods of promoting or discharging them are all far removed from modern business methods. Yet Congress is just as fully aware of these infirmities now as it will be when the report of this high joint commission is brought to the attention of the two Houses.

It has been said that we ought to send to the big successful business offices outside of the Government, and have their auditors and experts in accounting and bookkeeping come here and instruct our executive departments in modern business methods. I for one do not like the sound of that. With the experienced men in charge of our executive departments and with the expert business training that has grown up for a generation in these departments, I do not like to admit that we ought, as has been suggested, to send for the auditors of great railway corporations or oil companies and ask them to come here and explain how we ought to manage the business of the people of the United States.

There is another thing, I feel that we ought not to disparage our own work. It is bad enough to be accused of incompetency and inefficiency by disinterested outside parties, but such an accusation becomes a permanent humiliation if it originates with the party accused. If men confess that they have no business ability, that their affairs are in a bad way, that there is not sense enough or character enough in the Post-Office Department or in the Treasury Department or in all our executive departments to correct the faults of their administration, and that we must rely upon outside parties and the testimony of experts in order to get rid of the shortcomings that have attached themselves to our affairs, I fear that such a confession will go far to undermine the public confidence which ought to exist in our capacity to conduct public business. Besides that, we have had these business methods examined by joint commissions and special commissions and by special committees of both Houses of Congress within the last few years.

The Dockery commission spent months of time in the exact kind of research that is proposed here. More recently committees of the House on the expenditures in the various departments, spent a good deal of time upon the same subject. In the later months of the last administration, a committee of experts chosen from the departments known informally in Congress as the "Keep commission," went through all their business methods and made such suggestions as seemed to them to be reasonable and desirable; and only a short time ago a joint commission selected from the Post-Office Committees of the two Houses with the aid of high-priced experts, overhauled all the business methods of the Post-Office Department and made such suggestions as they thought were wise and appropriate to a Congress which placidly ignored the whole subject.

Now, we come with a blanket disparagement of the entire business management of the Government of the United States and say to three Senators and three Representatives and three people to be appointed by the President from the outside: "We are not only incompetent; we are not only wanting in business ability and in sensible methods, but we have no power within ourselves to find out what is the matter with us. Be good enough therefore to suggest to us such medicinal treatment as may occur to you in the course of your investigation."

Nobody pretends that work like that can be done in a month. The shortest time intimated to the committee was that it would require at least two years. Nobody pretends that it can be done with a handful of money. The smallest estimate made to the committee was that $300,000 would be necessary as a minimum expenditure to undertake this work. Nobody pretends that the work can be done here, because the committee was called upon, for the sake of the harmonious looks of the measure when it appeared in the Senate, to strike out a provision made in the original bill as it was introduced, providing for a careful examination by this commission of the fiscal systems of other lands—those nations of the Old World which have become so attractive to our students of governmental methods and public policies. That was stricken out, and yet nobody doubts that this commission, armed with its proper clerks and experts, will within a year be traversing the whole world looking for pointers on our executive affairs, finding out fine lines about the business management of other countries, and bringing home the sheaves of their new information to benefit their native land.

I have no particular objection to that, but I think the Senate and the Congress should understand that what is proposed here is a vast expenditure of public money, and that the good result of it could only be an untimely criticism of our business capacity as illustrated in the executive management of the Government during the past generation.

What is the motive of it? I do not know. I have thought a good deal to see if some reason for it could be suggested. I know that the executive departments of the Government are these days taking a good deal of interest in us. We have fallen upon times new and strange, when the frame, as well as the details, of legislation is perfected in the executive departments, and it looks to me as though this were either an act of reciprocity or retaliation—I can not tell which—either a reciprocity which recognizes gratefully the services which the executive departments are rendering to Congress or an act of retaliation by which Congress is about to say to the executive departments: "You attend to the preparation of bills for the Congress of the United States, and we will, as soon as possible, try to institute a modern system of bookkeeping for you."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I trust the Senator in charge of this measure will let it pass over. I desire to examine it, but the Senator knows I have been pretty well engaged in other legislative matters and have not yet had the opportunity to do so. I had no idea the bill was coming up to-day. I trust that, as is usual under such circumstances, the matter may go over. I further ask that it be not brought up until I can be present and shall have had an opportunity to examine it. I was called to my committee room for perhaps not longer than ten minutes the other day, and during my absence a very brilliant and illuminating speech was made by the author of the measure, the chairman of the Committee on Public Expenditures, and, I repeat, I have not had an opportunity since even to read it. So, if it is agreeable, I shall be glad to have the bill lie over until I can examine it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, a short examination made by competent persons into two bureaus of one of the great departments of the Government discloses the fact that the adoption of business methods would save 20 per cent of the expenditures and at the same time increase the efficiency of the service. There is no intelligent observer in Congress, or out of it, who does not know that the executive departments of this Government are carried on either under obsolete business methods or without business methods at all. There is no man who has given this subject any attention whatever who does not know or believe that at least 10 per cent of the thousand million dollars which we are appropriating annually can be saved by the adoption of business methods.

The motive which actuated the Committee on Public Expenditures, of which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] is a member, for presenting this resolution—and, as he says, he did not offer any objection to it—was to devise some method, if possible, by which this hundred million dollars could be saved. The American people are not distrustful of real efforts for reform. They are not distrustful about the truth with reference to the manner in which the public business is conducted. It may be that Senators do not desire to have an investigation for the purpose of reducing these expenditures. This investigation should be carried on by somebody.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island permit me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not just now. Wait a moment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I have no pride of opinion about how the investigation shall be carried on. I have no disposition, and certainly would not consent for a moment, to serve upon this commission, but there ought to be in the Senate, in the other House, and in the executive departments nine men who would give honorable and diligent service to this great work. In my judgment there is no one duty incumbent upon the American Congress which would be fruitful of such results in the public interest as this investigation.

We have not only obsolete methods in all the departments, but we have in them duplication of bureau after bureau. Of course, if there is any reason why this investigation should not be made, I hope it will be given here by some Senator who is familiar with the subject. But I say to the Senate, without reference to any other important duty, that this question of $100,000,000 saving a year—and it can be demonstrated, in my judgment, that the saving will be much more than that—is a matter which should receive the serious attention of Congress. How can it receive it in any other form? The various committees of this body which have to do with appropriations only make appropriations for certain objects and for officers or employees who are authorized by law. They do not take into consideration changes of methods. Such appropriations are made for salaries or for the employment of people authorized by law. The duplication of bureaus or the adoption of business methods does not enter into the contemplation of committees. There is no cooperation between committees here. The Committee on Agriculture, the Committee on Appropriations, and the various other committees of this body have no consultation with reference to the sums to be appropriated by the respective committees. They can not properly change legislation. This suggested commission is to consider questions entirely outside of the regular Appropriations Committee, to consider questions of methods, questions which would necessitate, perhaps, changes of laws. They have no power except to recommend.

I will say that, in my judgment, the expenditure of whatever sum it may be by this commission would be but a small fraction of the saving which would necessarily follow. We have had commissions heretofore, of course. We had a commission appointed by the President of members of the executive departments. They made certain recommendations, some of which were adopted and some of which were not adopted, but they did not cover this entire ground. We had the Dockery commission a few years ago, which spent a good deal of time in a very careful investigation of this question. They felt overwhelmed with the multitude of things that should be done. They made certain recommendations, some of which were adopted by Congress and some of which were not adopted. The work of each of those commissions and each of those investigations has resulted in good, and certain reforms have been inaugurated; but back of them all is this great mass of obsolete methods.

If I were a business man and could be permitted to do it, I would undertake to run this Government for $300,000,000 a year less than it is now run for. That is not to the purpose, of course; it is not to the point of this investigation; but I tell you, gentlemen, this investigation ought to be made by somebody. It ought to be made in such a way that there will be cooperation. As it is an investigation into the executive management, the executive departments should take part in it.

I will say, if I may be permitted to say it here, that this movement has the hearty and earnest support and cooperation of the President of the United States, who appreciates, as we do, the importance of having these methods examined and corrected and reformed, if possible. That is all there is to this question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I trust the Senator will pardon me. I have asked, I will say to the Senator, that this matter go over until I can have an opportunity to examine it and to be present when it is considered.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know about the Senator's engagements, and I should not like that the bill should go over indefinitely for him to be here, but I shall try to arrange it so that he shall be present whenever it is taken up.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I assure the Senator that I am not by any manner of means asking in the consideration of this important measure a fraction of the courtesy to myself that has been voluntarily accorded to others on an even more important matter now before the Senate. I am coming to this question, I hope, Mr. President, as I try to come to all public questions, with a fair and open mind; but I at least have not had an opportunity to investigate the matter or even to read the speech made by the chairman of the committee the other day, and I am sure—in fact, I know—that that is the condition of a great many other Senators. So I would be obliged and pleased if the Senator would let the bill go over for the present, as I do want to be present when it is considered.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I have listened with great attention to the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. He speaks with his usual force of the necessity of reforming obsolete methods of doing business in the executive departments. If he thinks reform is necessary, I think so, too. But, Mr. President, I do not believe in a commission that associates the executive and the legislative branches of the Government. The whole spirit of our institutions is to dissociate in all their labors the coordinate branches of the Government so far as possible.

If a better result could be reached by the association of two coordinate branches, it would be well to do it; but there is no proof anywhere that any good has ever come from such a combination. I am willing that the Senator from Rhode Island shall have his joint committee of the two Houses; I am willing that the executive department shall appoint a commission entirely from the outside; but I have this experience and observation after a considerable service in the two branches of this Congress, that whenever the President appoints anybody on a commission he is responsible to the President and to nobody else; and we shall have one commission working upon the same work responsible to two different heads.

The Senator from Rhode Island has made a terrific arraignment of the efficiency of the Republican administration of our affairs when he declared upon this floor, with the fullness of his knowledge of this question, that we are losing now one hundred millions a year—and he thinks it may go further—by what I may term "maladministration." He has made a charge, which probably his own party would like for him to substantiate. I am perfectly willing to take the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island as to the truth of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. MONEY. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Mississippi has used the word "maladministration," which is, perhaps, a stronger word that he would like to use.

Mr. MONEY. Yes; I think it is. I do not mean by "maladministration" that there is any corruption in it, but I mean a misadministration. I am not particular about the form of the word, but the meaning is, as the Senator has expressed it, by using obsolete methods they lose $100,000,000 to the Treasury annually, and he thinks much more. I am willing to concede all that he has said, because he knows the facts much better than I do; but I have this to suggest, that an executive order directed to the heads of the departments could quickly organize within each department a board which would find the root of this error and eradicate it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The reforms which we hope to accomplish must be accomplished by the cooperation of the executive branch and of Congress. Therefore it seems to me wiser that the commission itself, as the matters with which it will deal are matters of executive administration, should include members of the executive branch of the Government, selected by the President, in order that we may have cooperation between the representatives of each branch.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I do not concede the claim of the Senator from Rhode Island; I do not concede that it is at all necessary or even useful that the two branches should be united in this research. What we want is to correct the business methods of the executive departments. For what purpose? For the purpose of legislating, if legislation should be necessary. It might be that by an examination made by boards appointed by the heads of these departments, they could themselves correct the administration of their several matters and there would be no necessity whatever of any legislation; but we can avail ourselves of the report of an executive commission, if one is needed; and I would be willing to give the President the power to appoint such a commission, although I am against commissions as a general proposition.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator suggested that it would be entirely within the power of the Executive, by executive order, to direct the heads of the departments to appoint within themselves a commission. That suggests a thought to me that is interesting to my mind, and I want to ask the Senator, from his larger experience about it, is it not now within the power, indeed, is it not now the duty of the head of every one of the executive departments to make to the President, and through him to Congress, recommendations that may be necessary concerning the conduct of his own department? Is not the power already there?

Mr. MONEY. I think so. The Senator's question opens up a collateral one to the one we have under discussion; but it is certainly within the power of every head of a department in this Government to institute any reform within his department which he believes to be necessary to make a more efficient administration.

Efficiency means economy, and simplicity means efficiency and economy. All of us who have paid any attention to executive work know that there is going on in the executive departments of the Government duplication of work which is totally unnecessary. There are divisions with their chiefs and their assistant chiefs and their head bookkeepers and their assistant bookkeepers and their disbursing officers that are simply duplicating the work of other bureaus and other divisions. That can be simplified; and we have now a great Committee on Public Expenditures, the largest committee, I believe, in the Senate, charged with that very duty by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. MONEY. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understood the Senator to say that the President could, by executive order, provide for a board or commission that could enter upon the duty of reorganizing the departments according to business methods. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact—he has probably lost sight of it—that under the so-called "Tawney amendment," adopted last year, the President of the United States is expressly forbidden to make any detail to any commission unless it is authorized by law.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator from Nevada misunderstood what I said; that is all. But he can go on. I am perfectly willing he should proceed, but he did not understand me.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me read from the law.

Mr. MONEY. It is not necessary, if the Senator will allow me to say so. I did not mean a commission to be appointed by the Executive outside of the departments, but simply a commission instituted in each department to be appointed by its own head, and not a commission from the outside world, which would require legal authority to permit it to be done. It has been done without any legal authority in the past, but I hope it will not be done any more in the future. It has been too common here of late years for commissions to be appointed by the Executive when he had no shadow of authority for their appointment. We are all familiar with such cases. I am speaking of a commission within each department, under the order of the chief of that department, by the executive order of the President to the department, and not the appointment of an outside board, which is quite another thing.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit me, I will remind him that what he now suggests is apparently forbidden by the Tawney amendment. Let me read it to the Senator, Congress undoubtedly went a great deal further than it intended to do in its purpose of checking Mr. Roosevelt in the appointment of commissions, but the language of this provision would apparently prevent the President——

Mr. MONEY. I only want to occupy the floor a little while, and I hope the Senator will read the amendment without comment. Let us have the text and no comment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very well. The amendment provides:

SEC. 9. That hereafter no part of the public moneys, or of any appropriation heretofore or hereafter made by Congress, shall be used for the payment of compensation or expenses of any commission, council, board, or other similar body, or any members thereof, or for expenses in connection with any work or the results of any work or action of any commission, council, board, or other similar body, unless the creation of the same shall be or shall have been authorized by law—

Now comes the part to which I refer—

nor shall there be employed by detail, hereafter or heretofore made, or otherwise personal services from any executive department or other government establishment in connection with any such commission, council, board, or other similar body.

Mr. MONEY. I recollect that, Mr. President, but it has nothing on earth to do with my proposition. My proposition was simply that, under the order of the President, each head of department should appoint among his employees a board, without any extra compensation whatever, and needing no authority of law, to revise the methods of doing the business of that department, each one acting for himself. There is nothing in the text the Senator has read that at all refers to that course of action.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator think that reforms in government bureaus are likely to be accomplished by commissions consisting of heads of bureaus?

Mr. MONEY. I did not say "heads of bureaus." I said, Mr. President, that the Secretary of each department, for instance, the Attorney-General or the Postmaster-General, could appoint within his own force not heads of bureaus, but clerks of intelligence and honesty, who could report upon a system of work that would save the vast expenditure of over a hundred million dollars, which the Senator from Rhode Island thinks has been made unnecessary.

Mr. President, I am perfectly indifferent as to the method to be pursued, except that I do not like the combination of the executive and the legislative branches of the Government. It is a complication that never produces efficiency. If you provide for a joint committee of the two Houses, I am quite sure the Speaker of the House and the President of this Senate can find men of sufficient ability and sufficient address and skill and courage to go thoroughly into this matter, and they can hire the three men whom the Executive is to appoint as experts if they please, or 300 men, if they think it necessary for the proper and faithful discharge of their duty in this regard. Have not all the commissions appointed from the two Houses had their experts with great efficiency and great saving? This joint committee could have the same thing. But if it is proper, as this is strictly an executive matter, that the Executive should have the handling of it, it can be done in the way I have indicated, or, if that is not sufficient, then I would empower the President to appoint whomsoever he chose, although I am opposed to commissions as a general thing.

It is not the time for the Senate and the House of Representatives to confess to the public that they are unable to do the things necessary in the administration of the public affairs in their own line. If we are to undertake this at all, we should do it with confidence in our own ability to do the work and frame suggestions, if any legislation is needed for the action of both Houses of Congress.

I hope that the waste of the public money involved in these methods is not quite so great as the Senator from Rhode Island thinks it is; but I must say also that I yield to his superior knowledge of executive methods. I am very little acquainted with the executive methods of the departments, except that I can not help observing the duplication of work which goes on constantly.

I am not the man to complain that the clerks do not work. They do. They work as hard as any other class of people in the United States, and, considering the expense of living in Washington, I think their pay is too little. There is no economy in reducing the salaries of clerks, and it is a false economy to lengthen the time of their labor, because mistakes that occur in the day's work are generally in the last half hour of a hard, long, tedious day's work, which are to be overcome on the succeeding day. But you can economize by dismissing clerks who are doing unnecessary work. I recollect speaking to an officer in one of the departments and telling him, "You are duplicating work that is done in this very building," and he replied, "But do you not think that every department ought to keep tab of its own work?" I then said, "It seems another body of men who belong to another department are located in your building," and he said, "We want to keep tab on them." If that is the case, then there ought to be a third corps to keep tab on the second, a fourth to keep tab on the third, and so on, until you could stretch it out until the crack of doom—one set of officials keeping tab upon another set of officials.

There could be great reforms instituted. There is no doubt about that. I should not undertake to indicate them, because I have not that familiar knowledge of the departments that I once had. I have been too long a stranger to the executive departments of this Government to be so well informed as is my honorable friend from Rhode Island. I want this examination made. I am convinced that there is merit in the proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island. He is too accomplished a business man and too thorough a legislator to follow a "cold trail," and I know there is something there that ought to be corrected, if it is wrong, and something must be wrong or he would never have offered the resolution.

It is a pretty serious thing for a member of the Republican party to complain that his own administration is wasting over a hundred million dollars a year of the people's money by bad administration, by bad and obsolete methods, which could be corrected at any time if a single one of the executive department officers, acting for himself, should institute a little board to see how efficiency could be promoted by simplifying work or by any other method that would subject itself to the intelligence of men engaged in such a business.

Mr. President, as I have said more than once, commissions are nothing to my taste. I have always deplored the mixing of the two branches of the Government, especially in that sort of work. Above everything, I did deplore the President selecting Members of either House of Congress for important work to collaborate with men appointed from civil life. I opposed bitterly the appointment of Senators to sit in the Paris Treaty Convention. I do not know whether it is an executive secret or not, and I inquire if the ban of secrecy or the bar of secrecy has been removed from that transaction? If so, I will say that each Senator who went to that convention acted, I suppose, in good conscience, and yet one of them, who opposed every solitary line of that treaty, paragraph by paragraph and hour by hour, came here and asked the Senate to vote for its ratification. He could not sign a minority report, as the United States must vote as one and not as two in ratifying a treaty, but because he was on that commission and owed something to the President of the United States, who appointed him, he asked the Senate to confirm his work, which he himself opposed every minute in every paragraph and every line. That treaty was ratified to plague every solitary one of the men in the Senate who had given any thought to it.

Mr. President, there is no use to go into a general discussion of the evils of commissions. I have stated the ground of my opposition to the measure as it stands, and, with every desire to promote the wishes of the Senator from Rhode Island, I would be very happy to see him modify the bill so as to exclude the three or the six—either one he pleases. In either case better work would be done, and more promptly done, and if a joint legislative committee is to be organized for this work I am quite sure the ability necessary for it can be found, and I am quite sure they can employ all the experts, who will serve just as well or better under their command than sitting with them as collaborators in that work.

If this commission feature, including the outsiders, stays in, I shall vote against the bill, as much as I desire to have this reform instituted. But I would be glad to see that feature come out, in order that I may assist in my way in starting a work which is so obviously and imperatively necessary, according to the statement, with full knowledge, of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] that it would be preferable to provide for the appointment of a commission by the President upon which there should be no Members of the legislative body. The only point of difference between the Senator and myself is that he thinks the President now has that power.

Mr. MONEY rose.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Or so at least I understood him.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I disclaim anything of that sort. I said the President by executive order could instruct the heads of departments to organize within their departments, each one for itself, a committee of clerks, who would examine into the cost of doing business and recommend reforms to the head of the department, who would then institute them.

But I did not say, and I deny, that it would be a good thing to have a commission appointed in any other way.

Of course the President has no power to appoint a commission unless authorized by law to do so, although the practice has been the other way. But we have had so much done in the executive departments without the slightest reference to either the Constitution or the law that I can not expect it to cease all of a sudden.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not think I misunderstood the Senator. I understood him to say that the President has the power to appoint a committee—and the name means nothing—that he has the power, according to the Senator from Mississippi, to appoint a committee or a council or a board for the members of a particular department, with a view to making a certain investigation. I contend that Congress, unintentionally, perhaps, has prevented him from doing that very thing under the language of the so-called "Tawney amendment," for it expressly declares:

> Nor shall there be employed by detail, hereafter or heretofore made, or otherwise personal services from any executive department or other government establishment in connection with any such commission, council, board, or other similar body.

If the President proposed to act in the investigation or reform of the business methods of a particular department, how would he act? He would have to appoint a committee or a board or call upon the Secretary of that department to appoint a committee or a board from the employees of that particular department, which would make this investigation and upon whose recommendation action would be taken, and yet this law apparently forbids the detail of any person upon such board or council or committee.

Congress went too far. The purpose of Congress originally was to prevent the President of the United States from appointing from the outside commissions which were in aid of his recommendatory powers under the Constitution. But they went further and prevented him from detailing the employees of any department of the Government and their organization into a board or council or committee for such a useful purpose as is contemplated by this bill.

Those who disagree may think that statement is a strong one. But all will agree with me that the matter is in doubt, and it seems to me the very first thing we ought to do is to repeal that portion of the Tawney amendment, or to act affirmatively upon the matter and give the President of the United States the express power to bring these various bureaus of Government into coordination and cooperation in this work of investigating business methods.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] alluded to the fact that the Keep Commission did good work; but some of their recommendations were accepted and some rejected. I believe it is conceded by all the heads of departments under Mr. Roosevelt's administration that good work was done by that commission. I heard the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], who was Secretary of War and then Secretary of State under that administration, declare that good work had been done by that commission. Of whom was that commission composed? Mainly of men who have frequently been denominated the President's tennis cabinet—young men of enthusiasm and energy, who were appointed for the purpose of investigating these methods and reforming them.

The appointment of such a commission would apparently be impossible to-day under this act, and at the very time of and during the existence of that commission it was sneered at throughout in our legislative department.

Mr. President, I believe that this is a purely executive matter. It is proposed to reform the methods of administration. That is an internal work, which must be done by the departments themselves, under the direction and control of the President of the United States, and it can be done much better by the executive department than by the legislative department. All we need to do is to provide the President of the United States with the machinery and the money with which to accomplish it, and that machinery should be the designation upon a council or a committee or a board of the skilled employees of the executive departments to do this work, calling into cooperation with them known experts in business administration; and if we do that, I think we would pass a very much more effective bill than that which is now under consideration. At the same time, I am so convinced that these methods ought to be investigated and ought to be reformed that I am willing to vote for this bill unless a bill can be secured which will give the President the power to organize such a commission both by the detailing of employees of the various departments and the employment of expert advice. I think the latter method is infinitely preferable to a joint commission composed of Members of the Senate and the House and a portion appointed by the President himself.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the method employed to accomplish the result in view is not material. That some investigation is necessary all will concede. The observations of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] lead to the impression that the purpose of this investigation is to check certain abuses confessedly progressing under this administration, possibly abuses which have arisen under this administration. Nothing could be further from the fact. The Senator manifestly misconceives the disorder this legislation seeks to correct. Infinite duplication occurs in the various departments of the Government. We have eight or ten different map-making departments now working in the city of Washington, some making maps for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, others making maps for the War Department, others making maps for the Post-Office Department, others making maps for the Interior Department, and so on down the line. One map-making concern, with a number of skilled men, could perform all of the work with a moiety of the cost.

So it is with printing. Every department of the Government proceeds in its own way with the printing of documents, and this abuse has continued until we are now renting extra buildings in the city of Washington to house the great accumulation of useless documents duplicated indefinitely.

Two departments of the Government are collecting mineral statistics and statistics relating to the precious metals. The Treasury Department, through the Bureau of the Mint, undertakes to collect the statistics relative to the precious metals. A bureau of the Geological Survey is tramping over the same ground; and we have the anomolous condition of special agents of the Treasury Department in quest of the same facts being sought by special agents of the Department of Commerce and Labor. We have in many other departments duplication of work by special agents in the field.

This does not arise from any wanton disregard of duty by any officer of the Government—not at all. It arises largely, Mr. President, from a confused state of the law. Every act performed in the way of printing, in the way of special agents' activity is traceable to a section of law. It used to be a practice, happily being discouraged of late, to legislate extensively in appropriation bills. Thus we became the victims, in time, of ill-considered and contradictory sections of law, and all the time we were victims of bureaucratic advance to power. It is the most natural thing in the world for a bureau, once created, placed under a chief, to endeavor to grasp additional jurisdiction. The chief desires to have more employees, more power, greater scope for his activity; and imbued with that idea, which is inherent in human nature itself, the bureau chief comes to Congress from session to session with a view to having something added to his responsibility, some new clerk added to his staff, some authority given for exploration in some foreign field. Thus it has come to pass that through this method of legislation, largely on appropriation bills, we have the strange situation of the Government paying out, as has been roughly estimated, $100,000,000 annually in excess of what the Government's necessities really require.

Can an Executive correct this? I think not. The Keep commission, composed, as the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] has suggested, of capable and earnest men, failed to accomplish any substantial result. Congress resisted executive encroachment on the sphere of congressional action. Congress resented the idea of the President appointing any commission without authority of law. It was a commission unknown to our statutes and without authority anywhere, and it was inquired why the President authorized such a commission to proceed with an investigation. It was a very natural inquiry to make. The work of that commission, howsoever meritorious, came in the main to naught. Inasmuch as that work was not accepted, we can have little faith or hope in the acceptance of any like endeavor in the future.

In my own opinion, it is better for Congress to discharge its own full responsibility by appointing its committee, making due appropriation, and employing the needful experts to prosecute an inquiry into each and every department of the Government. Let the reform, when it comes, come as statutory law, binding upon the departments. One of the great difficulties in attempting to limit or restrict employment or work in any department rests in the general feeling of apprehension among the clerks that some one will be displaced. Men who get themselves snugly settled within a groove look with grave suspicion upon any departure which may dislodge them.

I do not think the departments themselves can institute the needed, far-reaching reforms essential to make the saving we have in view. I doubt not that the Senator from Mississippi has expressed the correct view when he proposes to eliminate an appointment by the President and to accept this work as a plain duty of Congress, a duty proceeding from the results of its own mistakes. The law must be corrected, and the department people will obey the law when it is corrected. I have no doubt whatever, from a brief experience with executive work, from observation for many years, that more than 10 per cent can be saved by correcting the law, avoiding duplications, and making the force effective.

This proposed legislation is a step in that direction. It proposes to look into the state of the law, the effect of its administration, and to correct the statutes so that the waste of public money may at some time be discontinued. If we neglect to do so during the present Congress, another year, a wasteful year, will follow before anything is done. I think the work has been too long deferred.

It is true, Mr. President, as the Senator from Iowa stated, that some of the departments have been examined. Much progress has been made in the examination of the departments. From the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, of which the Senator from Iowa is a member, together with certain members of the like committee on the part of the House, a commission was appointed, and they prosecuted a very searching investigation into the affairs of the Post-Office Department and the postal service; and, in my humble judgment, if the bill resulting from that investigation is enacted into law, the deficiency in the postal revenues will be wiped out, and we will be able in the course of a few years to give the American people 1-cent postage on letters.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Montana, who is well informed on this subject, exactly the status of that investigation into the affairs of the Post-Office Department. I remember that the commission gave a great deal of time and careful attention to the matter and made a very elaborate report. I noticed in a newspaper the other day a statement that they recommended 143 very important changes. Has the Senator some hope that we will legislate on that subject and bring about the changes that this very intelligent and hard-worked commission have recommended, or is it going to lapse and we will hear very little of it in the future?

I want to see it carried to fruition, because I do not like the idea of having a great commission, such as that was, give the time and attention to that matter which it did and spend a good deal of money, and then have nothing come from it.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from New Hampshire as usual is correct in stating it was a very intelligent commission.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; it was.

Mr. CARTER. I can speak for it. I was a member of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I had reference to the chairman, particularly.

Mr. CARTER. The commission did spend considerable money in the employment of expert accountants. The accountants examined the Post-Office Department very thoroughly. The work was commenced with a considerable force of men in April and continued until November. Recommendations were made of a far-reaching character. It was proposed to make changes; indeed, to thoroughly reorganize that department. In pursuance of the recommendations made and the facts disclosed, after consultation with the Post-Office Department officials, after obtaining the criticism and advice of thousands of postmasters over the country, the committee prepared a bill proposing a thorough and complete reorganization of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. CLAY rose.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator permit me for a moment?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. That bill was introduced in the last Congress, in both the Senate and the House. It was introduced late in the session, and it was desired that it should be first considered in the House, because Mr. Overstreet, a Member of that body, who thoroughly understood the bill, had not been reelected, and it was desired that he should direct the debate upon the subject during the remainder of his term.

Mr. CLAY. I should like to say a word, with the Senator's permission.

Mr. CARTER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CLAY. I agree with the Senator that the commission did much valuable work and suggested many important changes which ought to be enacted into law. But let me ask the Senator this: Is it not true that that commission was composed of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads of the House and the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate? The commission was selected from those two committees for the purpose of investigating the Post-Office Department.

The commission from the legislative branch of the Government, composed of Senators and Representatives, spent weeks and months investigating the Post-Office Department, and made a report. Now, why is it not true that the Committee on Finance or the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Expenditures can get together and make an investigation in regard to our expenditures, and make just as intelligent a report as a commission on which are Senators and Representatives and outsiders? In other words, can not the legislative branch of the Government perform that duty without any additional expense? This commission is to be composed of three outsiders, three Senators, and three Representatives, with the right to select just as many secretaries and stenographers and assistants as they need. Is it not true that it is the duty of Congress to perform this work, and is it not also true that Congress can perform it as intelligently without a commission, joined with Members of Congress, as they can with the commission?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I am not able to take issue with the Senator from Georgia with reference to the character of the commission or the manner of selecting its membership. My contention is that the commission, whether composed of Members of the two Houses of Congress or of outside parties altogether, should be appointed; and I believe that as against an outside commission the work will ultimately result in more effective legislation, tending to correct the evils we seek to correct, if composed of Members of the two Houses.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. CARTER. I should like a moment, before the Senator interposes, to make a further statement in answer to the question of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The commission reported the bill to which I referred, but the time was not adequate for its consideration. That bill has been reintroduced at this session of Congress, and I sincerely trust it will be accorded consideration before adjournment.

A very widespread alarm exists with reference to the proposed increase of the rate on second-class mail matter, for the purpose alleged of making up the deficiency in the postal revenue. That commission, or a commission previously appointed, found as a fact that the books of the Post-Office Department did not show, and could not be made to show, the cost of any service performed by that department. The Post-Office Department rests on a few sections of a statute passed in 1835, supplemented chiefly by appropriation-bill legislation subsequent thereto. The books are not correlated. There is no central system. They can not strike a trial balance or make one up; and when the Post-Office Department were put to the test to show wherein or upon what basis it cost 7 cents a pound to carry newspapers and magazines they were unable to furnish a single shred of evidence to show that any calculations at all had been made. A former Postmaster-General, Mr. Smith, at that time living, said he had forgotten the basis upon which he figured, and he was the first to announce the figures. Each succeeding Postmaster-General has reiterated the 7-cent statement in parrot-like fashion, without any investigation at all.

Mr. Madden, who was Third Assistant Postmaster-General, said, when put to the test, that he thought 4 cents a pound would be about right. But that was manifestly a guess. He knew nothing about it, and he was not to blame. The blame must be laid upon the antiquated system, which is defective and in no sense suited to the administration of a business which will this year involve the expenditure of $240,000,000.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator from Montana permit me to interrupt him here?

Mr. CARTER. I am glad to.

Mr. MONEY. I was unavoidably out of the Chamber and missed the previous remarks of the Senator from Montana, but I think the chief difficulty, if he will permit me to interrupt him with it, is that the department has failed to realize what it is for. The idea has obtained for a long time in the Post-Office Department that the Government is engaged in a business, called the "Post-Office Department," and that that business has to pay its own way, and if it does not pay all its expenses, it is a failure and has somewhere to be reformed. We never have asked the army or the navy or the legislative department or the judiciary to pay their way. They do not know that the post-office is a function of the Government and not a business, that it is no more required to pay its way than is the army or the navy. What it is required to do is to distribute the mails of the country, to put the people of different sections into communication with certainty, celerity, and security. But considering it simply as business, of course as honest men they must make it pay its way. They do not know what it is for.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, there is no doubt whatever that the Post-Office Department can pay its way and avoid a deficiency under the administration of a thoroughly organized business. The American people, I think, expect to pay the way of the Post-Office Department. Each person expects to pay for the service received. There is no desire to avoid that payment. But I think it is a mistake to undertake to make any class of people pay a deficiency which can be eliminated by a correct business administration.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, in deference to the expressed opinion of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber and upon this side, I propose to modify the bill so that it will provide for five members of the Senate and five Members of the House, striking out the provision in regard to appointees by the President.

Mr. CLAY. Leaving it without any members to be appointed by the President?

Mr. ALDRICH. Leaving that out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island offer that as an amendment?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 5, before the word "members," strike out "three" and insert "five;" in line 6, before the word "members," strike out "three" and insert "five;" and in line 7, after the word "thereof," strike out the comma and the following words: "and three members to be appointed by the President," so as to make the first section of the bill read:

> That a commission is hereby created, to be called the "government business-methods commission," to be composed of five members of the Senate, to be appointed by the presiding officer thereof, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker thereof, and any vacancy on the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, this is a matter concerning which I have not had an opportunity to make much of an investigation. I find here on the calendar the bill, and no report whatever accompanying it. There does not appear to have been any report made by the Committee on Public Expenditures that was appointed last spring under some general rule. I gather from the speech made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE] that a subcommittee was created, and then a subcommittee of that subcommittee was appointed, and that subcommittee has some report, which is in this record, but it does not accompany the bill.

We have just had an instance here of a committee appointed to investigate the Post-Office Department. I had not heard of it before, but from the remarks made it was a thorough report that was presented here, but nothing at all has come out of it. Some bill was introduced in a former Congress, but it was not passed, and nothing has resulted from it.

The question in my mind is simply this: If this commission is appointed, and goes on with an extensive investigation and finds here and there methods which are lax, will it have any power to dictate to the department in which it finds lax methods and wastefulness? Will it have any power to make an order binding on that department and prescribe a rule of action for that department which they must follow? Can it exercise any such power or authority as that; and if it can not, what will it accomplish further than to report back to the Senate some abuses that it finds here and there?

If that is all that it can do, having no power to execute, being simply a committee of discovery, why can not a committee of the Senate, investigating methods in the departments, do exactly that thing without creating here a standing commission for that purpose? A standing commission, if it is going to perform a public service, if it is going to remove abuses and enforce economy, it seems to me will have to be given some power to make orders and to execute orders, to prescribe methods and to enforce methods.

But I find no attempt of that kind here, if any such thing could be delegated or given to such a tribunal. So the question comes in my mind, of what avail will this commission be if the bill is passed?

Mr. ALDRICH. I promised the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] to allow the bill to go over for to-day. I do not know whether he would object to the amendment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I should like to state to the Senator from Rhode Island that I am desirous of preparing an amendment that will carry out the suggestion made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] that the President himself be authorized to appoint a commission, consisting of three members, who shall enter into this work of investigation.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will state that the amendment I have just offered is satisfactory to the Senator from Mississippi. He has given his assent to it, and I think it meets with his approval.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am very sorry the Senator from Mississippi has withdrawn his suggestion, because I think it would be very much better to have such a commission appointed by the executive department than to have the commission consist entirely of members of the legislative department.

The business methods which we wish investigated and reformed are those of the executive department, and I would think it much better to allow that department to cleanse itself, simply providing the machinery that is essential for that purpose. That machinery can be afforded by giving the President of the United States the power to appoint this commission and to employ such experts as he deems necessary, and to carry out their recommendations so far as coordination of services, the prevention of duplication of work, and more economical methods are concerned.

I think that we will have immediate results if that is done. I have no doubt that the President of the United States is intent upon an economical administration. There is every evidence of that, and I have not the slightest doubt that if we give him the machinery and the power to proceed important economic reforms and important administrative reforms will be accomplished.

It seems to me that a very logical method of proceeding would be to give him the power, which he now lacks under the so-called "Tawney amendment," of bringing together into coordination the various bureau chiefs, the various service chiefs, through a board, or boards, and permitting them, through the valuable adjunct of consultation and cooperation, to bring about the administrative reforms which I have no doubt they will be eager to accomplish.

That was attempted with reference to the Keep commission, and we have the authority of the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], whom we all know to be a practical administrator, a great administrator, for the statement that a valuable work was done by that commission. Yet that commission was a purely voluntary commission, appointed by the President without the authority of law and without expense to the Government. The government service has to-day the most capable men in the country employed in its different services, and if you will only give them a chance to coordinate and cooperate, you will accomplish great results.

An endeavor was made to bring about coordination with reference to the Forest Service. The Forest Service was under the Agricultural Department. The Indian Bureau of the Interior Department was also conducting a forestry service. It is clear that any great employer with one such service would not duplicate it, and yet the United States was running two forestry services. By an arrangement between the Secretary of the Interior and the Chief Forester practical coordination was accomplished; and that was disarranged by the Tawney amendment under this administration, for the reason, I imagine, that there was no authority of law for it.

I believe that we can make this work efficient by giving the power to the President of the United States to make use of the capacity and the talent now engaged in the administration of the Government, and by giving him the machinery by which he can make that capacity and talent effective. Add to that a limited appropriation of not exceeding $25,000 or $50,000, with power to such a commission to employ the aid of outside experts, and you will complete the machinery; whereas if you organize a legislative commission composed of Members of the Senate and of the House, although men doubtless of large capacity and experience, they will be obliged to go into an investigation of this matter, to summon before them experts; they will go to a very large expenditure, and then will come back to Congress for the ratification and approval of the measure which they recommend. On the other hand, I believe that, without further legislation, if you will simply give the President of the United States the power to bring into coordination and cooperation the various services of the Government through the appointment of a board or boards, without increasing the expense at all except the small expense necessary to employ experts, we will have immediate results commencing in the very near future and progressing entirely through the administration of the President; whereas I believe if you appoint this legislative commission, with the Members of Congress overloaded as they are now with the work imposed upon them by their constituents, with committee work, and with legislative work, it will be at least a year before you hear from them, and you will obtain then, probably, only a preliminary report, and it will be two or three years before you get final results in the shape of legislation.

The example of the Monetary Commission is now before you. It was appointed pretty nearly two years since, and what results have you? What results can we get from overworked legislators, with reference to a special matter of this kind, that ought to be undertaken by a board having no other function to perform?

So, Mr. President, I should like to have the bill go over in order that I may prepare an amendment confining the work entirely to a commission appointed by the President of the United States and giving him the power, which he now lacks, to utilize the present efficient services of the government employees through the process of coordination and cooperation in the work of administrative reform.

Mr. JONES. Would it not be well also in the provision to authorize the President to carry out the conclusions of the board as fully as possible?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think it would. Though Congress might hesitate to do it, I should prefer to do that. But, of course, Congress is jealous of its legislative functions and might not be willing to go so far.

Mr. JONES. Does not the delay in reference to carrying out the recommendation of the Post-Office commission illustrate the tardiness of Congress?

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is true; and it was true with reference to the Dockery commission. The Dockery commission was in session for years. I served in the House with Mr. Dockery, who was the head of that commission, a man of talent and capacity and great industry. He was a hard-worked man upon the Committee on Appropriations in the House, and to his work as a legislator was added the work of that commission. I saw how it consumed his time. If you look over the records of that commission, valuable as its work was, you will find that it covered a number of years; that the reports were made at different stages, recommending changes here and there, many of which were not adopted by Congress itself. It seems to me that that is an example of the halting way in which this matter will progress if an overworked Congress is called upon to discharge this function, which really, in my judgment, belongs to the administrative department of the Government.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have a vote on the Senator's amendment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that the bill may go over until I can prepare such an amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator can prepare his amendment very readily.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Why not let the whole matter go over?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understood that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] was not here. I see he is here now.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will be absent in a moment. I have work to do in my committee room.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It will take time to frame such an amendment as I wish to offer as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is understood, I believe, between the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senate that my request of this morning is to be complied with. I must leave the Chamber in a few minutes on committee business.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the amendment I offered may be disposed of to-night.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have a substitute to offer for that amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I must return to my committee room on committee business; and the whole matter, I understand, goes over.

Mr. ALDRICH. After the amendment is disposed of.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have a substitute to offer for that amendment, but it is suggested to me that the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island can be adopted and then I can offer a substitute.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; that is right.

Mr. NEWLANDS. A substitute for the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator can offer a substitute for the whole bill, undoubtedly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very well.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the amendment I offered be agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether he will accept this amendment:

That the President be authorized to bring into coordination and cooperation through a board or boards the various bureaus and services of the Government with a view to the establishment of more business-like methods in the departments.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is a distinct proposition. I should not feel authorized to accept it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then I will prepare my substitute later on.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like to inquire why the Committee on Public Expenditures does not do this work? We heard last spring a great deal about what was expected of that committee. It is composed of the chairmen of the various committees that handle the appropriations of the Government, and they certainly would be better qualified to pass upon economies than anybody else. Why does not that committee, created for that specific purpose, submit some report here and some suggestion for the Senate to act upon, instead of having another committee or a commission appointed to do the very work that that committee was supposed to be appointed to do?

My information may be wrong, but I have been told that the chairman of one committee that handles an appropriation is not willing that the other chairmen of other committees shall say to him what should or should not go into his appropriation bill, and the result is that that committee can not agree. If that is the case and a report is made to the Senate that such is the fact, then that committee should be discharged and a commission organized; but until there is some information as to why the committee is not doing the work that it was assigned to do, it seems to me there is no occasion for this commission.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas seems to have a certain amount of misinformation in reference to this subject. The Committee on Public Expenditures reported this bill and made a statement that they could, perhaps, make this investigation through a subcommittee, or, rather, through a smaller committee. The committee of twenty-one certainly can not make the investigation by itself; and the Committee on Public Expenditures, after giving the matter a great deal of thought and a great deal of consideration, decided that this was the best way to reach some results.

The Committee on Public Expenditures have not, as the Senator is advised, been neglectful of their duties. They have had frequent meetings and have discussed many problems connected with this subject. Some members of that committee, or a subcommittee, have given a great deal of time and thought to these questions.

But this work has to be done by a smaller body, and the recommendation of this large committee was perfectly unanimous, so far as I supposed. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] has dissented to-day, but at the meeting of the committee there were 18 members present, and they voted unanimously that this was the best way, in their judgment, to meet this question.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me inquire again: Would it not be perfectly feasible for a subcommittee of that committee of 21 to do this work? As I understand it, the committee recommend that a commission be organized to do the work which the committee was organized to do, and so it may be absolved, therefore from the responsibility of making the economic recommendations which it was supposed it would originate by virtue of its existence.

If I understand the Senator from Rhode Island correctly, the committee finds that the only way to perform the functions which it was supposed to do is to create a commission to perform them, and it therefore will be relieved from the responsibility. Is that the conclusion?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator let me suggest to him a practical difficulty which the new Committee on Public Expenditures met? The House has no such committee. There is no general large committee on public expenditures in the House. That body has nine or ten separate committees on the expenditures in the different departments. That, of course, makes it impossible for any action to take place by two corresponding committees. Therefore the Committee on Public Expenditures provided, and the amendment offered now by the Senator from Rhode Island in charge of the bill gives the opportunity, as it ought, for the House, as a legislative body, to take part in the consideration of these questions.

That can only be done either by a commission, as first proposed, or a joint committee of the two Houses. That is not an essential question; but the committee feels, and the Senator from Rhode Island feels, I know, that in entering upon this large and important work no committee of the Senate alone can deal with it to advantage.

It must be dealt with in connection with a corresponding committee from the House of Representatives, so that it will have, whenever it arrives at any conclusion, the joint force of the two legislative bodies. That is comprehended in the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

I think the Senator from Kansas himself will see, as a practical legislator, that it can not be done by one House. There has been great objection urged here to mixing a commission of Congress and of the executive departments, but that has been obviated by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I realize the force of what the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has stated, that the work would have to be cooperative on the part of the two branches of the Congress; but I should like to inquire, from his large experience, if it is not his observation that large expenditures are incident to our system of government? Is it not true that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], with his experience and capacity as a business man, could take the financial affairs of the Senate and conduct its business as well as it is conducted to-day for 25 or 40 per cent less money than we are now expending? Is it not true that any thorough business man could take the financial affairs of the House of Representatives and attend to the business in a thoroughly competent way for 40 per cent less than is now expended? Probably a greater per cent could be saved by a business man if he could take up any one of the departments of the Government and conduct its business upon an economical basis.

The objection that I have to the proposed commission is that I do not think it will amount to anything or that we shall get any practical results from it. I think the Senator from Rhode Island is correct when he says that he could administer the affairs of this Government for very much less money than is now expended for that purpose. Any business man could conduct the affairs of any government as a private institution for less money than such government spends. It has been that way from the beginning and it will be that way until the end.

This Government is not conducted as a business institution; it is a Government of the people of the United States, conducted in harmony with their wishes. There is not an executive officer in any of the departments of the Government but knows that, if he had the authority, he could run the affairs of his department much more economically than they are run.

I had a little experience in a quiet way once in trying to reduce the expenses of the carrier service of the city of New York, when I was connected with the Post-Office Department. I discovered upon inquiry that there were blocks of residences in New York where the mail was being delivered six times a day; carriers were going around and around those blocks calling at the residences and delivering mail six times a day. I did not think it was necessary, and I recommended to the Postmaster-General that he reduce the number of deliveries from six to four. He signed such an order, but within thirty days the order was revoked, because the Member of the House and the Senators representing that constituency demanded that it be revoked for the reason that, in their judgment, they were afraid it might injure the efficiency of the service. It would not have done so, but they thought it would. That is simply a small illustration of the way that things are done. You can not commend it, but how are you going to correct it?

I make the assertion here now that every man familiar with the departments of this Government knows that there are hundreds of employees whose services could be dispensed with without any injury to the public service. There are employees of this body that could be dispensed with without any injury to the public service, and the same is true in the House of Representatives and in every state government of the United States; but they are not dispensed with. What I object to is the going to a lot of expense to find out that we ought to do things that we know now we ought to do, but will not do.

That is true of the Executive; it is true of the legislative; it is true of governments as a whole. They ought to be restrained and kept within certain bounds, but, from my point of view, the proper authority to restrain is the Executive himself, and I think that he is making commendable efforts to do so. I am in hearty accord with the suggestions made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] that the Executive ought to be given encouragement by us instead of our going ahead and establishing another commission to spend a lot of money and make a report which probably none of us will any more readily accept than the Committee on Public Expenditures is disposed to accept the recommendations made by its individual members.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as an additional section, to be known as section 3.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill, as a new section, the following:

SEC. 3. That the President is authorized to bring into coordination and cooperation the departments, bureaus, and services of the United States, with a view to the improvement of business methods, through the appointment of a board or boards composed of the employees of the United States, including such experts as he may deem advisable: Provided, however, That the total annual expenditure under this head for contingent expenses and employment of experts shall not exceed $50,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada desire to discuss the amendment?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, in accordance with the agreement made with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], I now ask that the bill go over, but I desire to give notice that I shall ask the Senate to take it up at the earliest possible moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion. There are a number of Senators who want an executive session, if it be agreeable to the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's motion is in order, if he insists on it. Does the Senator from Montana withdraw his motion?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope he will withdraw it, so that we may have an executive session.

Mr. CARTER. I see no objection to an executive session; but I understood that a number of Senators thought best to adjourn, as it is late in the afternoon. However, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at 3 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 22, 1910, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 21, 1910.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by Rev. Frank Oliver Hall, D. D., of New York.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

RULES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MURDOCK. For a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Rule I of the House reads as follows:

The Speaker shall take the Chair on every legislative day precisely at the hour to which the House shall have adjourned at the last sitting, immediately call the Members to order, and on the appearance of a quorum, cause the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting to be read, having previously examined and approved the same.

The House adjourned under rather unusual circumstances on Saturday. My inquiry goes to the fact as to whether or not the Speaker of the House ordinarily does approve the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will reply, in answer not strictly to a parliamentary inquiry, but as to a question of fact. The rules of the House require the Speaker to refer to the various committees bills which are introduced under the rules. There have already been introduced in this House over 20,000 bills. The rules require the Speaker to examine the Journal and to refer reports to the calendars. Now, with the duties of the Speaker it would be a matter of impossibility that he should read every particular bill; that he should watch the Journal; but the House in its wisdom has given a Journal clerk, reading clerks, an assistant to the Journal clerk, a clerk to the Speaker's table, an assistant to the Speaker, and, in addition, it has commissioned 391 Representatives whose duty and privilege it is to be as vigilant as the Speaker is required to be under the rule.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, another parliamentary inquiry, bearing on the same question——

The SPEAKER. One moment. The Journal is brought to the Speaker for a preliminary approval, as the Chair is reminded by the Clerk to the Speaker's table. This gentleman has been for many years Clerk to the Speaker's table, known to the membership as being far more competent as to the procedure under the rules than the Speaker, or any Speaker, I will say, with whom I have served. The Journal is brought by the Journal clerk to the Speaker's room every morning, inspected by the clerk to the Speaker's table, and if any question of doubt arises it is referred to the Speaker. That was done this morning.

Mr. MURDOCK. Ought not the Clerk in reading the Journal in this case to recite the names of the absentees?

The SPEAKER. The Journal has already been approved, and having been approved——

Mr. MANN. The Journal recites the names of the absentees.

The SPEAKER. The Journal gives the names of the absentees when the Committee of the Whole reports as it did Saturday, and the Journal just approved has that list of absentees. But in the practice of the House ordinarily there is not a demand made that the names should be read when the Journal is read for approval. At any rate, it is too late now, because the Journal has been approved. If the gentleman was anxious to have the names read, he makes his inquiry too late. He sat in his seat until the Journal was approved, and under a parliamentary inquiry the colloquy between him and the Chair has occurred.

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. Speaker, I desire that the RECORD be corrected so as to show that I was present when the roll was called on Saturday.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present, and did he answer to his name?

Mr. MOSS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the RECORD will be corrected, and the Journal also.

There was no objection.

EXAMINATION OF CAPE LOOKOUT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The first business reported from the Unanimous Consent Calendar was Senate concurrent resolution No. 21.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 21.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause a further and supplemental examination to be made of Cape Lookout, North Carolina, provided for in the river and harbor act of March 3, 1909, with a view to determining its relative advantage and value as a site for a harbor of refuge for coastwise and deep-draft vessels as compared with other localities on the coast of North Carolina, especially the harbors of Beaufort, Southport, or Cape Fear and Cape Hatteras, and to submit the results of such examination, together with estimates of cost, to Congress at the earliest date practicable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the concurrent resolution at this time?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is this resolution up for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the confusion in the House is so great that it is impossible to hear.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the resolution.

The resolution was again reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the resolution if he thinks it is possible to accomplish this by concurrent resolution?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It is a concurrent resolution. The last river and harbor bill directed a survey of the coast of North Carolina to determine a suitable place for a harbor of refuge. Under the report made, Cape Lookout was found to be a desirable place for a harbor of refuge, but the engineer did not report that it was the most desirable place. The report was not complete. It did not determine fully the question submitted, and the Senate, desiring further information upon the subject, passed this concurrent resolution, asking a reexamination to determine whether this was the most desirable place or not. It is possible that action might have been taken by the Commerce Committee of the Senate, sending the resolution to the Chief of Engineers for further information, but, in their wisdom, they thought otherwise, and this concurrent resolution was adopted. It was approved by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors without amendment. There is no new survey ordered. There is no expenditure of money. It is simply a reexamination, in order to obtain the information desired by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House and the Committee on Commerce of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KEIFER. I did not hear the answer of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] to the inquiry of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], and I am not satisfied that you can legislate in this way. A concurrent resolution does not have to go to the President for his approval, and unless it is in the form of a bill or a joint resolution and goes to the President, it will not be legislation at all, in my opinion. Not being satisfied with it, I think we ought to object until we can look into it, at least.

Mr. MANN. It is in accordance with the river and harbor act.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. This is simply a resolution passed by the Senate seeking to obtain further information with reference to the harbor of refuge where the survey has heretofore been made, but the report is not as complete as the Senate thinks it ought to be. The facts are in the office of the Chief of Engineers of the War Department, and it will be able to complete the report and send it to the Senate. It is simply a demand for a completed report. It does not require any new survey or any new expense. It is merely a resolution requiring the department to furnish the information they have obtained, and which it is necessary for the Senate and House to have to act upon.

Mr. MANN. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the river and harbor appropriation is a provision that the department shall not make any survey, and so forth, unless provided for in the act or called for by resolution of Congress.

Mr. KEIFER. This is not a resolution of Congress in the sense that it has the force of law.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The resolution is nothing but a request for further information.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Will the gentleman allow me to explain the situation?

Mr. KEIFER. Let me just make this statement: I do not understand that Congress can by concurrent resolution direct anybody, any executive officer, any Secretary of any department, to do anything; and if it could, it would involve an expenditure of money to make the surveys, or whatever it be, and that belongs to legislation.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman from Ohio will understand that it is doubtful if the information can be otherwise obtained. It is possible that under the rule it could be done by the Committee on Commerce in the Senate or by the River and Harbor Committee of the House by a direct order from the committee to the department itself under the law, but the Senate was doubtful of the propriety of such action, and asked the concurrence of this House merely to obtain information which they desire and which we desire.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's statement may be right; but I can not understand how either House, or both, can by concurrent resolution give any direction such as is given here.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. There is no direction given; we are simply asking for information, which, no doubt, is compatible with the public interest.

Mr. KEIFER. It may be done by law of Congress, no doubt; but Congress can not, by concurrent resolution, give the force and effect of law. This can only be done by bill or joint resolution. This provides, necessarily, for an expenditure of money.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me? The act creating the Department of Commerce and Labor provided for a Bureau of Corporations, and so forth. It is provided that that bureau shall make certain investigations, and so forth, and shall make investigations upon the request of either House of Congress. Now, the investigation is made by virtue of the law, although the request only comes from one House of Congress. As I remember the river and harbor act, it provides practically the same thing.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand from the gentleman in charge of this matter that the Senate does not think so, and therefore wanted the action of Congress. I do not believe it can be obtained by a concurrent resolution.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman must misapprehend the situation entirely. There is nothing here relative to an order which would cause the making of an appropriation. Congress has already authorized the survey. The notes of the survey and the facts are in the office of the Chief of Engineers. The report of the engineer was just not quite as complete as the Senate desired. This can be obtained by direction under the law—by joint or by concurrent resolution, or possibly by committee resolution directed to the department. Now, the Senate desires further information, to determine what action it shall take on the question of whether Cape Lookout is the most desirable place for a harbor of refuge on the North Carolina coast. They have passed that resolution, and this has met the unanimous approval of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors as the orderly way of proceeding in the matter.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Let me say to the gentleman from Ohio that a complete report can be made from the statements already on file in the offices of the Chief of Engineers and the local engineer.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, it is made very plain by the statement of the gentleman that it requires the action of Congress, in that it asks the Secretary of War to do that which he does not feel he is authorized now by law to do. Therefore it would involve some further survey and some further expense; whether it is large or small, it would be directing by resolution of the two Houses, not by a joint resolution, something to be done. Therefore, for the present, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KEIFER. I objected.

Mr. GAINES (to Mr. KEIFER). Withdraw your objection and let him have his chance, on a close question like that; we can vote it down.

Mr. KEIFER. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 74. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy Mr. Juan Torroella y Rooney, of Cuba;

S. 6431. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 6286. An act to authorize the Copper River and Northwestern Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Copper River, in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes;

S. 6229. An act to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Missouri River at Yankton, S. Dak., by the Yankton, Norfolk and Southern Railway Company;

S. 5268. An act providing for the construction of steam launches for the United States Revenue-Cutter Service for duty in the waters of Puget Sound;

S. 5075. An act granting an honorable discharge to Thompson B. Pollard;

S. 5851. An act to amend an act approved August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to establish a national military park at the battlefield of Chickamauga;"

S. 5007. An act to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment, and for other purposes; and

S. 1027. An act for the reimbursement of certain sums of money to certain enlisted men of the Philippine Scouts.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution and bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 74. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy Mr. Juan Torroella y Rooney, of Cuba—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 6431. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 6286. An act to authorize the Copper River and Northwestern Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Copper River, in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 6229. An act to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Missouri River at Yankton, S. Dak., by the Yankton, Norfolk and Southern Railway Company—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 5268. An act providing for the construction of two steam launches for the United States Revenue-Cutter Service for duty in the waters of Puget Sound—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 5075. An act granting an honorable discharge to Thompson B. Pollard—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 5851. An act to amend an act approved August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to establish a national military park at the battlefield of Chickamauga"—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 5007. An act to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 1027. An act for the reimbursement of certain sums of money to certain enlisted men of the Philippine Scouts—to the Committee on War Claims.

ALTER ROAD, DETROIT, MICH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 18593) to authorize the transfer of the government highway known as the Alter road to the city of Detroit, Mich.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor for and on behalf of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to dispose of and convey by deed to the city of Detroit, Mich., the government highway, known as the Alter road, running between Windmill Point light station and Jefferson avenue, in the city of Detroit, Mich., and described as follows: That certain parcel of land situate in the township of Grosse Pointe, Wayne County, Mich., described as follows, to wit: Commencing at the point where the easterly line of private claim No. 120 intersects the southerly line of Jefferson avenue, so called, thence westerly along said southerly line a distance of 33 feet, thence at right angles for a distance of 27 chains and 55 links to the rear line of private claim No. 696, thence at right angles in an easterly course 33 feet, thence at right angles in a northerly course to the place of beginning. Also, all that portion of private claim No. 570, described as follows, to wit: Commencing at a point where the westerly line of private claim No. 570 intersects the southerly line of Jefferson avenue, so called, thence at right angles easterly along said southerly line 33 feet, thence at right angles southerly a distance of 27 chains and 55 links to the rear line of private claim No. 696, thence at right angles along said rear line in a westerly course to an iron post distant 33 feet, thence at right angles in a northerly course to the place of beginning. Also, a strip 33 feet in width off the westerly side of private claim No. 696 and 33 feet off the easterly side of private claim No. 120, both said private claims 120 and 696 being in said township of Grosse Pointe. The premises herein conveyed form a strip of land 66 feet wide and with that width extending uniformly from Jefferson avenue to the shore of Lake St. Clair: Provided, That the said highway shall be maintained by the city of Detroit forever as a public roadway or thoroughfare; that the course of the road, as at present existing, shall not be changed in any way without the prior written consent of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor; that the officers and employees of the Government shall have a right at all times to pass and repass over the roadway and to transport all necessary materials thereon: And provided further, That in the event of the discontinuance by the city of Detroit of the use or maintenance of the above-described property as a highway, or of the violation by the city of the terms and conditions preceding, the title herein ceded shall revert to the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Insert as a new section:
"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. The unanimous consent asked for is that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of this bill and that the House do now consider the same.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who reported the bill, explain why the Government of the United States acquired this land and why it is no longer necessary for government purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Government maintains at the head of the Detroit River a light-house, known as the "Windmill Point light station." Thirty-four years ago the Government obtained a deed to a strip of ground to connect the light station with Jefferson avenue in the city of Detroit, to be maintained as a public highway. There was no street laid out connecting the light station with the city street, and in order to get to the light-house it was necessary to have a right of way, and the city obtained the deed set forth in the report, granting to the Government the title to the property embraced in what is now the road connecting Jefferson avenue with the light station, with the provision in it that it should be forever maintained as a public highway.

In the course of time the city of Detroit has grown until this public road is now practically one of the city streets, but the Government has not maintained it in good repair, and is not desiring to do so. The city of Detroit has passed a resolution asking that this road be turned over to the city, in order that the city may improve it, and the provision in the bill is to turn it over to the city to be maintained as a public road, so that we will have the same use of it as we have now, with the difference that it will be kept in good order and the Government of the United States will not be put to the expense of paving it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MINNESOTA AND MANITOBA RAILROAD COMPANY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16920) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appraise certain lands in the State of Minnesota for the purpose of granting the same to the Minnesota and Manitoba Railroad Company for a ballast pit.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be appraised the south half of the southwest quarter of section 4, township 161 north, range 34 west of the fifth meridian of the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, for the purpose of granting the same to the Minnesota and Manitoba Railroad Company for a ballast pit for ballasting its line of railway in the State of Minnesota, and upon appraising said land the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to convey the same to said railroad company upon such terms as he may deem advisable: Provided, That he shall not convey said land to said railroad company until Hans M. Carlson, who has heretofore made homestead entry thereon, shall relinquish such homestead entry and claim to the land herein described, which relinquishment the said Hans M. Carlson is authorized to make without prejudice to his rights as homesteader, and upon the filing of such relinquishment said land shall be withheld from public entry for the space of six months within which to complete the negotiation for the same provided for by this act: Provided, That said railroad company shall pay, in addition to the appraised value of said land, the sum of 3 cents an acre, as drainage charges, as required by section 8 of the act of May 20, 1908 (35 Stats., p. 169).

The SPEAKER. The request for unanimous consent covers the discharge of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and the consideration of the bill in the House. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill whether it is his opinion that its language saves to Hans M. Carlson his rights as a homesteader, so that he can make another entry? I have some doubt about that. That is the evident intent of the bill, but it seems to me the language is not happy.

Mr. MANN. The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Carlson has a homestead entry on the land, and he is a section boss on this railroad, and I am advised he is willing to relinquish and does not object to the passage of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman does not understand my inquiry. It is the evident intent of the bill to save to Carlson the right after he relinquishes this entry to make another; but I doubt whether the language of the bill will give him that right.

Mr. STEENERSON. That proviso was put in at the request of the Interior Department.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think it saves Carlson's rights to a second entry.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think Carlson's rights are protected; I am not worrying about that. Whether Carlson has a right to a second entry or not is really immaterial. He does not oppose the bill, and he need not relinquish unless he desires to.

Mr. MONDELL. Very well. Evidently the bill was drawn with that intent, but I doubt if it gives that right.

Mr. STEENERSON. The bill is satisfactory to all concerned, and there is no opposition that I am aware of.

Mr. MANN. He will not need to make another homestead entry hereafter if he sells this to the railroad company.

Mr. FASSETT. He will not need to be a homesteader then.

Mr. MONDELL. I withdraw any objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE CONNECTICUT RIVER, CONNECTICUT.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 5680) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Connecticut River, in the State of Connecticut, between the towns of Old Saybrook and Old Lyme.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Connecticut, acting through the Saybrook and Lyme Connecticut River Bridge Commission, a commission created by the laws of the State of Connecticut, be, and hereby is, authorized to construct and maintain a drawbridge across the Connecticut River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between the towns of Old Saybrook and Old Lyme, in the State of Connecticut, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS COLUMBIA RIVER AND CELILO CANAL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17160) to authorize the Oregon Trunk Railway of the State of Washington to construct a bridge across the Columbia River and Celilo Canal.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Oregon Trunk Railway, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River and the Celilo Canal, and the lands of the United States at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Celilo, in the States of Washington and Oregon, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The following committee amendments were read:

In line 6, after the word "river," insert the word "and."
In line 7 strike out the words "and the lands of the United States."
In line 12, after the word "six," add the following proviso:
"Provided, That in approving the plans for the bridge herein authorized, the Secretary of War may, subject to such terms and conditions as in his judgment are equitable, expedient, and just to the public, grant to the said Oregon Trunk Railway a right of way across the lands of the United States on either side of and adjacent to the said Celilo Canal, and also the privilege of occupying so much of said lands as may be necessary for the piers, abutments, and other portions of the bridge structure and approaches."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ARKANSAS RIVER AT VAN BUREN.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20044) to authorize the Fort Smith and Van Buren district to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River at Van Buren, in the State of Arkansas.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill 6191, which is identically the same as the House bill.

The SPEAKER. It seems that the bill H. R. 20044, on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, is a bridge bill, which has just been read. From the statement of the gentleman from Illinois it seems that the Senate bill, identical with the House bill, is in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from consideration of the Senate bill and substitute it for the House bill and consider the Senate bill. It seems to the Chair that that request comes within the spirit of the rule. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Of course, Mr. Speaker, if the bill had not been referred from the Speaker's table, it would be in order to take it up.

The SPEAKER. That is correct. Without objection, the House bill will be laid on the table and the Senate bill considered at this time.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Fort Smith and Van Buren district, a body politic and corporate created by act of the general assembly of Arkansas approved April 10, 1909, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Arkansas River at Van Buren, Ark., and its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River between the cities of Fort Smith and Van Buren, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, one end of said bridge to be in the corporate limits of the city of Van Buren, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill at this time?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS TUG FORK, BIG SANDY RIVER.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19967) authorizing the Warfield Coal and Salt Company to construct a bridge across Tug Fork of Big Sandy River.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the substitute offered by the committee in place of the original bill. It is one of the old form of bridge bills, we have stricken out all after the enacting clause.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That Thomas J. Ewing, of Catlettsburg, Ky.; George B. Patton, of Catlettsburg, Ky.; Otto Burger, of Cincinnati, Ohio; William Cecil, of Catlettsburg, Ky.; and Milton E. Foster, of Dayton, Ohio, their heirs and assigns, are hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a wagon, foot, and railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or on the property of the Warfield Coal and Salt Company, at Warfield, Ky., where the said Tug River forms the boundary line between the States of West Virginia and Kentucky, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906.

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. This is a private bridge owned by private parties?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the public have the use of it?

Mr. MANN. That is a matter within the control of the War Department. Although this bridge that is proposed to be built for the Warfield Coal and Salt Company is to get across the river, it is within the control of the War Department as to whether the public will have the use of it under the general bridge act.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the public want to use it?

Mr. MANN. It is not a toll bridge.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You are authorizing the building of a railroad, wagon, and foot bridge?

Mr. MANN. Yes; it is a railroad bridge to carry the coal across the river, a wagon bridge to get their wagons across, and a foot bridge for the benefit of the employees.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do they have the right to levy a toll? That is what I want to get at.

Mr. MANN. They do not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is there anything in the law anywhere regulating the height which bridges should be above navigable streams?

Mr. MANN. There is nothing in the law, but before a bridge is built the people making application for a permit have to submit their plans in complete detail to the War Department, and that has to be approved by the department, and no bridge is authorized to be built which interferes with navigation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One Secretary of War might think a bridge over a navigable stream of a certain height to be proper and that it would not interfere with navigation, whereas another Secretary might be of a contrary opinion.

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman that this matter is not left to the Secretary of War. Under the general bridge act the Secretary of War and the Chief Engineer must each coincide in their judgments in reference to the matter.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The reason I say that to the gentleman from Illinois is that I have in mind certain structures across navigable streams in my own State which very seriously interfere with the navigability of the streams.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is correct. Those bridges were built before the General Government assumed control over the construction of bridges over navigable streams. I have some in my own district that I would like to get rid of.

Mr. BOEHNE. Is there anything in the law that will prevent the public from using the bridge?

Mr. MANN. There is not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

MAIL SUBSIDY—REPORT OF MINORITY.

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this morning a report was made by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries on what is known popularly as the "Humphrey mail-subsidy bill." The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries unanimously agreed that the minority might have ten days after the printing of the report of the majority of the committee within which to file the views of the minority, and I now ask unanimous consent that I, as the ranking Democrat on that committee, be granted ten days within which to file the minority report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that he may be granted ten days within which to file the minority report on the Humphrey mail-subsidy bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BOARD OF MANAGERS NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 142) for appointment of members of Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 137.

Resolved, etc., That James W. Wadsworth, of New York; Henry E. Palmer, of Nebraska; John M. Holley, of Wisconsin; Henry H. Markham, of California; and Oscar M. Gottschall, of Ohio, be, and the same are hereby, appointed as members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers of the United States; Maj. James W. Wadsworth to succeed himself, his present term of service expiring April 21, 1910; Capt. Henry E. Palmer to succeed himself, his present term of service expiring April 21, 1910; John M. Holley to succeed himself, his present term of service expiring April 21, 1910; Col. Henry H. Markham to succeed himself, his present term of service expiring April 21, 1910; and Oscar M. Gottschall to succeed Gen. Charles M. Anderson, whose term of service would expire April 21, 1912, but who died on December 28, 1908.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa in charge of the resolution whether this is the usual method of appointing these commissioners?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; they have to be appointed this way under the law. It is simply a reelection of all of them except one from Ohio, where the manager for that institution died, and this is filling his place with a gentleman from Dayton, Ohio, recommended by the Representative from Ohio who comes from Dayton, and by the entire Ohio delegation, I believe.

Mr. NORRIS. This board is provided for by general law?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Absolutely.

Mr. NORRIS. And the general law provides that they shall be elected by Congress?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; it is always done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

MARKING GRAVES OF SOLDIERS AND SAILORS OF CONFEDERATE ARMY AND NAVY.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 137) to continue in full force and effect an act entitled "An act to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the confederate army and navy who died in northern prisons and were buried near the prisons where they died, and for other purposes."

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 137.

Resolved, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the confederate army and navy who died in northern prisons and were buried near the prisons where they died, and for other purposes," approved March 9, 1906, and continued in full force and effect for two years by a joint resolution approved February 26, 1908, be, and the same is hereby, continued in full force and effect for one year from this date: Provided, That said act shall not be construed to apply to the Confederate Mound in Oakwood Cemetery at Chicago: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may cause to be erected at the head of each grave of a citizen or civilian prisoner of war who was buried among the soldiers a headstone of the size and dimensions of those placed at the head of the soldiers' graves, but containing no inscription except the number of the grave, the name of the occupant, and the word "citizen" or "civilian" placed thereon, and at an expense for each no greater than that for each soldier: And provided further, That the compensation of the commissioner shall be fixed by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Will the House give unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the resolution just read and consider the same in the House at this time? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question? There was reported a similar proposition in the Senate. I do not now recall whether it has passed the Senate or not.

Mr. DENT. It has not passed yet.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman inform us whether it is identical with this?

Mr. DENT. Exactly with this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

TENTS FOR USE OF CONFEDERATE VETERANS' REUNION.

The next business reported from the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 63) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the confederate veterans' reunion to be held at Mobile, Ala., in April, 1910.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 63.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to loan, at his discretion, to the executive committee confederate veterans' reunion, to be held at Mobile, Ala., April 26, 27, and 28, 1910, such tents, with necessary poles, ridges, and pins, as may be required at such reunion: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of such property, the same to be delivered to said committee designated at such time prior to the date of said reunion as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and Jacob D. Bloch, general chairman of said executive committee: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall, before delivering such property, take from Jacob D. Bloch a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CONSTRUCTION OF REVENUE CUTTERS.

The next business reported from the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 1381) to provide for the construction of a revenue cutter of the first class for service in the waters of Key West, Fla.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to provide and equip two new revenue cutters at a cost not exceeding the sum of $250,000 in each case, and when either of said revenue cutters shall be placed in service, one of the revenue cutters now in the service shall thereupon be retired from service.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized from time to time to make such transfer and change of stations of revenue cutters as he may deem desirable for the best interests of the service, and in his discretion to direct any revenue cutter to cruise in any waters to perform the duties of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to provide two new revenue cutters, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to the consideration of this bill by unanimous consent.

EXCHANGE OF LAND FOR LAND OWNED BY THE CAVE HILL CEMETERY COMPANY, LOUISVILLE, KY.

The next business reported from the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19558) authorizing the Secretary of War to effect an exchange of a certain parcel of land owned by the United States for another parcel owned by the Cave Hill Cemetery Company, of Louisville, Ky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to convey to the Cave Hill Cemetery Company, of Louisville, Ky., a parcel of land 20 feet in width, comprising a portion of section D of the Cave Hill (Ky.) National Cemetery, containing approximately 2,010 square feet, and required by the said company for a cemetery roadway, in exchange for a parcel of land containing approximately 3,240 square feet lying north of the said national cemetery plat and separated therefrom by an 8-foot pathway: Provided, That the said company will disinter and properly reinter in the plat to be conveyed to the United States all remains buried in the plat to be conveyed to the said company and will remove and properly reset the headstones at their respective graves.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHEBLEY] to make any explanation he desires. But first I will ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. I move that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of this bill and that it be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ROAD FROM HARRISONVILLE, N. J., TO FORT MOTT, N. J., ETC.

The next business reported from the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1014) providing for the repair and rebuilding of the road from Harrisonville, N. J., to the post of Fort Mott, N. J., and the national cemetery at Finns Point, New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of repairing and rebuilding the road leading from Harrisonville, N. J., to the post of Fort Mott, N. J., and the national cemetery at Finns Point, New Jersey; said sum to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is this road a county road?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say, Mr. Speaker, this is a short road connecting the railway station with Fort Mott, N. J.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How long?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. From 4 to 6 miles long. As I understand, this has been asked for for some years by the War Department on the ground that it needs it, and that it costs more to haul their supplies over it during a large part of the year than it would to rebuild it, and they have recommended it as a military road and a military necessity. I will say further, very few people live along this road; none of them ask for it. I desire now to yield to the gentleman from New Jersey for any further explanation that may be desired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to inquire if the gentleman is aware of any instance where the United States has acquired a road on the ground that the township in which it is located is too poor to keep the road in shape?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think there are a great many cases where the roads are built by the Government where the needs of the Government were sufficiently impressive to demand that construction. I do not understand that the people are asking for this at all, but the gentleman from New Jersey is entirely familiar with it, and I would ask him to give the gentleman an answer.

Mr. MONDELL. Before the gentleman yields I would like to inquire of him if this road is on government land?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it the policy of the Committee on Military Affairs to recommend the construction of roads out of public funds leading toward the military posts and cemeteries?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not at all.

Mr. MONDELL. To cemeteries?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is not the policy. We did it in this case because the Quartermaster-General of the Army stated that it costs more each year to transport what is necessary for the support of troops at Fort Mott over the bad roads and hard haulings; that they have to use the road daily, and their report was that as a military necessity they recommended the adoption of this bill for the purpose of making it so the Government would save money.

Mr. MONDELL. Can any community in which there is a military post located, by refusing or declining to keep up the roads between the depot or between the town and the post, compel the Government to build a road for them?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I should say that where there was ample settlement, and the people themselves were interested in a road, that would not be at all probable.

Mr. MONDELL. Why can not the Government put the military posts where the people are interested enough to build roads to them?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They have the post established, I suppose, where they want it, and, as I understand, it is in a sparsely settled part of New Jersey. It is not a road for the convenience of the people. If it is, we have gained the wrong impression. It is a road for the convenience of the Government itself.

Mr. MONDELL. Will not this lead to interminable road building on the part of the Government?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think not.

Mr. MONDELL. Has it not always been the policy of the committee to decline the building of roads from towns to military posts?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Absolutely; yes.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield for a question? I notice in the report of Captain Harrison, on which I think this bill is largely based, on page 4, it states:

> The road in question is the only approach to Finns Point National Cemetery, located on this reservation. There are many precedents for special appropriations by Congress for roads such as this, especially roads leading to national cemeteries.

I would like to ask the gentleman whether there are any precedents in that regard?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I will answer the gentleman's question by making a little more of an explanation than a mere answer. Years ago Congress did establish such precedents. It had one at Vicksburg, that I recall very well, and one at Fort Scott, Kans., that I recall. The Vicksburg road was from the city of Vicksburg to the national cemetery. The Committee on Military Affairs, since I have been actively connected with it, has always refused to make an appropriation for this character of road, and, in my judgment, never should have undertaken to build a road of that character. The words the gentleman has referred to had no influence whatever on the committee in the report on this bill. What did influence them was the further language of Captain Harrison, where he says:

> Harrisonville is on the road from Fort Mott to Salem, N. J., about 4 miles from Fort Mott and about 2½ miles from Salem. Salem is the railroad depot, post-office, express office, and general base of supplies for this post. Access to and departure from Fort Mott is necessarily via Salem. The road from Salem to Harrisonville is a good shell road, while from Harrisonville to Fort Mott it is bad in the extreme. As a military measure and as a procedure of public economy steps should be taken immediately to put the road in good condition, as money so expended would soon be restored many fold in reduced freight charges and in the saving of government horseflesh and means of transportation.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman pardon one other question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We quote also from the report of what I conceive to be the strong point in this matter, differentiating it from other roads, where he said:

> It is necessary to use this road daily to obtain mail, supplies of food, forage, freight, etc., regardless of its condition. The result is that its present condition is a source of expense to the Government as regards animals and transportation, in addition to being a source of constant annoyance to all concerned.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman one more question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I examined the report on this question very carefully, and came to this conclusion myself, namely, that if the Government maintained the post, it ought to improve the road. Is it necessary to maintain this post at this point?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The Board of Ordnance and Fortifications evidently think so, because they maintain a three-company post there.

Mr. MANN. It is not like an infantry post?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not at all. It is a coast-fortification post. It takes it out of the other class entirely.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to three extracts from the report. Here is a statement of the Quartermaster-General:

> It appears that the road is entirely outside of the reservation.

Then here is another statement from a captain of the Coast Artillery Corps, in which he says:

> The road between Harrisonville and Fort Mott is a township road of the township of Lower Penns Neck, county of Salem, State of New Jersey. It is the usual country road, unimproved, more or less heavy throughout the year, at times practically impassable.

I find another statement made by Captain Harrison, of the Artillery Corps, in which he says:

> The township of Penns Neck, in which this road is located, is too poor to do anything. The only course lies in an appeal to Congress.

If we build a road in this township approaching a military reservation where it is asserted that the township is too poor to build it itself, then Congress will be asked to improve the roads in every State in the Union.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, Mr. Speaker, that means that wherever a coast artillery post is located in a section of country the Government must get to it; and if the road is not built by the people there, the Government will have to do it in its own defense. I yield now to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. MACON. I suppose the right to object is still reserved.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, this road is off a very prominent road in Salem County, between Harrisonville and Fort Mott in Lower Penns Neck, in the county of Salem. It is a very good shell road. The road desired by the Government leads from this shell road to the fortification. The taxable property of that township, even on this good public road, leads back to the land owned by the Government for its fortification and cemetery location. There is not and never has been on the part of the people of that section any need for the improvement of this road, for its whole practical use is for the benefit of the government reservation. The people in that township are not too poor to build roads. They have good roads, stone roads, macadamized roads; but they do not feel that they ought to be taxed to build this road, the only and sole use for which is the transportation of goods to this reservation. No constituent of mine nor any people there have ever made any request in regard to the building of this road. It has all been urged by the War Department. It is an economical measure. As the report here shows, the difference in the bids for the supplies for Fort Mott, being delivered at the fort, proves that the condition of this road adds very largely to the cost of those supplies when delivered at the fort.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why are these goods not shipped by water?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. There is no way by which they can be obtained by water, because they do not go in large enough quantities to be sent by the boat load, and no steamers plying land at the fort.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How can it be that there is a fort for coast defense at a place where there is no water?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. It is a place where there is no water for transportation. There is no line of steamers that runs there. It was originally thought that it might be proper for the Federal Government to build part of this and the rest of this improvement to be built by the county. The original estimate was for $8,000, and it seems that they think it would be better for them to have $10,000, and the Government do all the work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can only say that I shall object, Mr. Speaker, to unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

SWAMP LANDS OF WISCONSIN.

The next business on the Calendar of Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 1448) transferring swamp lands to the State of Wisconsin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to transfer to the State of Wisconsin the following-described swamp lands: The west half of the southeast quarter, the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter, and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter, all in section 31, in township 12 north, range 14 east.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out section 2.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in reference to this bill, which is apparently in the interest of the Beaver Dam Cotton Mill Company and apparently gives them certain lands for their benefit, a certain amount of land in the lake donated to the State of Wisconsin, to be maintained as a part of the lake for the benefit of this Beaver Dam Cotton Mill Company. May I ask the gentleman with reference to this statement in the report as to the city of Beaver Dam getting part of its water supply from this lake? I suppose the city of Beaver Dam is not very large. How much of the lake does it require to get a water supply from, and how does it happen it gets only a part of its water supply from this large reservoir? Where does it get the rest of its water supply?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Public Lands in considering this bill did not go into all the questions which the gentleman from Illinois perhaps very properly brings up. The question presented to us was simply this: The United States patented to the State of Wisconsin certain swamp lands, and included within the exterior boundaries of the land patented to the State of Wisconsin were the lands in question. They were all supposed to be overflowed lands, and they were not as to part of the land within the mentioned boundaries of the lake.

It developed later that there is a small island which appears above the waters, and an entryman attempted to make entry on these lands, and his entry was accepted, but the Commissioner of the General Land Office held that the title in those lands was not in the United States, but in the State of Wisconsin. I then asked the commissioner whether it would not be possible under the circumstances to convey by description. The Secretary thought it would not be possible. He was still of the opinion that the title was in the State of Wisconsin, but believed that in order to make it entirely certain the bill should be passed. The fact is that within the boundaries of this lake, from which the city of Beaver Dam obtains some of its water, it being a town of 3,000 people, I understand, there is a small island, which does not appear on the plats of the Federal Government at all. It is within the meandered boundaries of the lake. Therefore it would remain in the State of Wisconsin, except that some time in the future some other misguided entryman may come along and again attempt to make an entry and again be turned down; and in order to settle the matter conclusively the committee, following the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, proposes to quiet the title of the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. MANN. I call the attention of the gentleman to this statement in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior relating to this land:

The field notes of the survey do not show the lands in question to be swamp lands.

The land has never been patented to the State. Now, upon what basis does the gentleman state that this was originally considered as swamp land, when the swampiness of it is now owing to an artificial lake.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, because the Commissioner of the General Land Office, if the gentleman will read the report——

Mr. MANN. I remember that the Commissioner of the Land Office set aside the homestead entry.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will read the Secretary's report, he holds that this land——

Mr. MANN. I have done the honor to the gentleman to read the entire report of the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. The Secretary of the Interior considers that the land belongs to the State of Wisconsin. As a matter of fact the plats do not show the tract at all. It is within the meandered boundaries of a swamp area, and everything within those meandered boundaries is submerged except a very small island. I do not know how many acres it contains. The Secretary does not say.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman state what is the law, so far as the title to lands in interior lakes are concerned, which are not included within the original government survey, whether the title is in the United States Government or whether it necessarily goes to the State?

Mr. MONDELL. The title necessarily passes to the riparian owner, and the riparian owner in this case was the State.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are many instances of unsurveyed islands in the lakes of northern Wisconsin where the title to the land has not been included in the original survey by the Government, and where individual squatters have located on these respective islands. I believe there is at present pending before the Committee on the Public Lands a bill authorizing the National Government to donate to the State of Wisconsin title to the islands in these various meandered lakes to which title has not heretofore been given.

Mr. MONDELL. Answering the gentleman's question, I would say that, in carrying out the surveys of the public lands, when the surveyors reach a permanent body of water it is meandered, and the meander boundary is established at what is supposed to be the point of low water. It sometimes occurs that where these meander boundaries are fixed about a lake there may be land within the area of the lake that rises somewhat above its surface. In certain cases the surveys are made at a time when such bodies of land are in fact submerged, and therefore the surveyors do not take notice of them.

In other cases these islands were so low that the surveyor assumed that they were overflowed a considerable portion of the time. For one reason or another they are not surveyed, but they are within the meandered boundaries.

Mr. MANN. Meandered boundaries of what?

Mr. MONDELL. Of the body of water.

Mr. MANN. Of the lake?

Mr. MONDELL. Of the lake. Now, the Government assumes ordinarily that these small bodies that sometimes appear above the surface of the water later are due more or less to the subsidence of the water. Sometimes an entryman comes along and claims a right to these small areas; generally the General Land Office, if a considerable length of time has elapsed since the survey, holds that the Federal Government passed title when it disposed of the riparian land; but if it is shown that the island is of considerable area and that it was above water at the time the survey was executed the Government sometimes reasserts its right of ownership and orders a survey to be made of such an island.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would not claim that an island would pass to a riparian owner?

Mr. MONDELL. It is often very much of a question whether at the time the survey was executed the island actually existed as an island.

Mr. MANN. Suppose it did not actually exist, but that the island appears in the middle of the lake, the person owning the property adjoining the lake does not take title to the island under his riparian rights.

Mr. MONDELL. As a strict legal proposition, that is undoubtedly true. But if the Federal Government, through a long series of years from the information before it, holds that the area is so small or so low that it would be properly included within the meandered boundaries it does not reassert its right, then the title does pass.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, if, as the gentleman from Wyoming claims, it does go to the riparian owners in the case of a lake where the meandered lines are all the way around it, by what rule or in what way would the island be divided between the different riparian owners?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is propounding some very difficult legal propositions.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me it must reduce itself to this proposition, that these islands in the lakes, whether they in fact existed at the time of the survey or not, could not go to the riparian owners, but that they are government lands, whether they existed when the survey was made or appeared afterwards.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, that is not the law; and I think the gentleman, on reflection, will admit that it is not.

Mr. NORRIS. It may not be in this particular case where the land deeded was swamp land and was described by metes and bounds.

Mr. MONDELL. This land was probably submerged at the time of the survey; and, if so, the riparian owner took to the center of the body of water.

Mr. MANN. But that would depend on the size of the lake.

Mr. MONDELL. He would take to the center.

Mr. MANN. The Supreme Court has decided otherwise.

Mr. MONDELL. The riparian owner takes to the center of the lake or stream of water.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; if it is a stream, but that is different from a lake.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentlemen are discussing this matter from the view point of state legislation, where the State has assumed title to the riparian lands. But if the State does not assume title the riparian owner owns to the center. But, Mr. Speaker, these are legal questions that ought not to be raised in connection with this matter. This is simply a case of quieting title to a very few acres of land which rise but a short distance above the waters of Beaver Dam Lake that for generations has been supposed to be the property of the State of Wisconsin, until some one came along, badly advised, and attempted to make a homestead entry on that small area. The Land Office holds that the Government had no title to the land, and the request simply is that the title in the State of Wisconsin, which the Government has always acknowledged, shall be quieted.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with this bill or the precise object of it, but the precedent is one of importance. The gentleman says that it is a bill to quiet a title, but it is to transfer a title from the Government, if it has one. I do not understand that the title to islands lying in many lakes and navigable rivers pass to the adjoining owners of the land. That applies in all the Northwestern States. There may be something about swamp lands in this, but I am of the opinion that it would be setting a bad precedent.

Take the survey of the river that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] lives on, the Republican River. The body of that stream was theoretically treated as a navigable stream, and there were islands in it when it was surveyed that never passed from the Government, and there are more islands that have formed there since. It is by no means certain that there is riparian ownership of these islands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I observe that the author of the bill is absent. He might possibly explain it if he were here. Therefore I object.

JOHNSON COUNTY, WYO.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17872) providing for the sale to Johnson County, in the State of Wyoming, of certain lands for poor-farm purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to sell and convey to the county of Johnson, in the State of Wyoming, the following described tract of land, to wit: The south half of the southwest quarter of section 5, the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter, the south half of the northwest quarter, the south half of the northeast quarter of section 8, and the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 9, in township 50 north, range 82 west of the sixth principal meridian, containing 320 acres, more or less, upon the payment by the said county of the sum of $1.25 per acre for the said lands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice the title of the bill provides for the sale of certain lands to Johnson County, Wyo., "for poor-farm purposes." I do not notice anything in the bill itself in regard to poor-farm purposes, and I suggest to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that he so amend the bill by inserting after the word "less," line 2, page 2, the words "for poor-farm purposes," or else amend the title by striking out those words. If he means it to be for poor-farm purposes, it ought to be put in the bill, and if he does not mean it, it ought to be left out of the title.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the title is simply descriptive of the purpose for which Johnson County desires the land.

Mr. MANN. Then let us put it in the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. But, as a matter of fact, the committee, observing its usual rule in the case of selling rough and rocky and nonirrigable land, provided for a fee simple, which I think proper, because the county of Johnson might sometime in the dim and distant future desire to transfer the land, and it seems to me there should be no objection to their doing it.

Mr. MANN. If the title means anything at all, it might cloud their title. I am in good faith in saying what I do, that we do not want to put provisions in the title of a bill which are not in the bill itself.

Mr. MONDELL. I would be willing to strike from the title the words "for poor-farm purposes."

Mr. MANN. I do not care which it is. I do not think it makes any difference. If there is any reason why it should not be inserted in the bill, it should be taken from the bill, and I can see that the county might sometime wish to dispose of the property and that possibly that might put a cloud upon the title.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill at this time? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent the title was amended by striking out the words "for poor-farm purposes."

HOT SPRINGS STREET RAILWAY COMPANY.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13899) granting unto the Hot Springs Street Railway Company, its successors and assigns, the right to maintain and operate its electric railway along the southern border of that portion of the Hot Springs Reservation, in the State of Arkansas, known as the Whittington Lake Reserve Park.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the right is hereby granted unto the Hot Springs Street Railway Company, its successors and assigns, to maintain and operate its electric street railway as now laid and encroaching, in whole or in part, at various places, amounting in the aggregate to not exceeding 800 feet in length and 20 feet in width, upon and along the southern border of that portion of the Hot Springs Reservation, in the State of Arkansas, known as the Whittington Lake Reserve Park.

With the following amendments:

Line 4, page 1, after the word "assigns," insert "during the existence of the franchise granted by the city of Hot Springs."

Add at the end the following:

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ADVERSE CLAIMS, ALASKA.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 621) to amend sections 2325 and 2326 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment in the nature of a substitute be read in lieu of the original bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That in the district of Alaska adverse claims authorized and provided for in sections 2325 and 2326, United States Revised Statutes, may be filed at any time during the sixty days' period of publication or within six months thereafter, and the adverse suits authorized and provided for in section 2326, United States Revised Statutes, may be instituted at any time within sixty days after the filing of said claims in the local land office."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. This completes the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

FEDERAL TAX ON LIFE INSURANCE.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an editorial from the New York Sun of this day in reference to federal tax on life insurance. It is a matter that I am much interested in, and I heartily indorse the editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The editorial is as follows:

THE FEDERAL TAX ON LIFE INSURANCE.

When the federal corporation tax was on its passage through Congress unavailing efforts were made to obtain an exemption in favor of life insurance companies. In their fiduciary relations to the public there is no essential difference between life insurance companies and savings banks. The great majority of the policies written in this country are of the nature of savings deposits. They not only insure against economic loss through death, but have a current borrowing value and provide for an old-age fund for the holder on the expiration of the policy. Yet life insurance companies were subjected to the tax, apparently for no reason except the political motive of centralizing the power of "regulating" corporations.

It is difficult to understand what constitutes net profit in the case of life insurance corporations. Most of them are of the mutual order, and pay dividends only to policy holders. These dividends are not equivalent to profits in the commercial sense, for they represent in large part merely a return of overcharges contained in the loading of premiums. If the loading itself when returned to the policy holder is not regarded as profit, is the interest earned by the loading while in the hands of the companies to be classed as profit? How are the earnings of the loading to be distinguished in the general income from investments? With the best of intentions life insurance officials are unable to declare what constitutes net income even under the law, for the law does not explicitly define either taxable bases or exemptions as regards fiduciary corporations.

However the law is finally interpreted, the tax will add to the cost of life insurance. A tax on thrift is never in the public interest. The statesmanship which gratuitously imposes a national tax of this kind in our day of excessive local taxes, excessive rents, and excessive commodity prices is beyond comprehension. Equally incomprehensible is the failure of this extraordinary act to guard against double taxation. Not only does the law tax the profits of ordinary mercantile corporations, for example, but it taxes the insurance which, in conformity with a growing business practice, such corporations maintain on the lives of their principal officers.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to call up the conference report on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, to move to suspend the rules and adopt the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, moves to suspend the rules and adopt the following conference report, which the Clerk will read.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. LAW. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18282) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1910, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 47.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4 and 38, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following: "Furnishing new post-office, custom-house, and court-house, Cleveland, Ohio: For furniture equipment for the new post-office, custom-house, and court-house building at Cleveland, Ohio, one hundred and sixty thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"United States court of customs appeals: The salaries of the judges, officers, and employes of the United States court of customs appeals, authorized by the act approved August fifth, nineteen hundred and nine, entitled 'An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes,' shall hereafter be at the rates per annum as follows: For the presiding judge and four associate judges, seven thousand dollars each; marshal, three thousand dollars; clerk, three thousand five hundred dollars; assistant clerk, two thousand dollars; five stenographic clerks, one thousand six hundred dollars each; stenographic reporter, two thousand five hundred dollars; messenger, eight hundred and forty dollars; and for the payment of the said compensation for the balance of the fiscal year nineteen hundred and ten, at the rate herein fixed, there is appropriated the sum of twenty-seven thousand four hundred and forty dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following:

"The allotment for printing and binding for Congress is hereby made available for the printing, under provisions of existing law and the rules of the Senate and House of Representatives relating to public printing, as public documents of such of the publications of the National Monetary Commission as the commission may designate. And the Superintendent of Documents is hereby authorized to order reprinted from time to time, such public documents of the National Monetary Commission as may be required for sale."

And the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

JAMES A. TAWNEY,
GEO. R. MALBY,
E. J. BOWERS,
Managers on the part of the House.
EUGENE HALE,
J. H. GALLINGER,
A. S. CLAY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. LAW. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LAW. For the purpose of making a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. LAW. My point of order is that the managers have included in their report matters not in difference between the two Houses. I have specific reference to Senate amendment No. 36. Now, I apprehend that the preliminary question will arise here as to whether the point of order lies on this motion to suspend the rules, and I would like a ruling on that point before proceeding with any argument as to the merits of the main proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule. This is a question that has risen before.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the motion is to suspend the rules, and no point of order can be made.

The SPEAKER. This is a motion to suspend all rules touching this report which would prevent its present consideration. The point of order made by the gentleman from New York would prevent the present consideration of the report. This is a motion to suspend the rules and agree to the report. There was a ruling in the last Congress, quite a lengthy one, and the Clerk will read from it.

The Clerk read as follows:

This motion is to suspend all rules which otherwise might forbid consideration of the report; and that includes all practice, all parliamentary precedents, if you choose; for the precedent or practice manifestly is not of higher dignity than a former rule of the House. Therefore, in the opinion of the Chair, the point of order under this condition is not well taken. The House, of course, has its remedy, if it desires to exercise it, by rejecting the conference report, if such is the judgment of the House, or by agreeing to the report. The Chair does not desire now to express any opinion as to whether or not the point of order would be sustained if it were otherwise presented than under a motion to suspend the rules; and for the reason assigned the Chair overrules the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Having a precedent which the Chair thinks is a correct precedent, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. LAW. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, his colleague, has already demanded a second.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman is opposed to the conference report I will yield to him.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the conference report?

Mr. LAW. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Minnesota is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAW] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the only item in the conference report that is of material consequence is the item in respect to the salaries of the judges of the court of customs appeals and the salaries of their stenographic clerks. The act fixing the salaries at $10,000 a year for the judges and $2,400 a year for the stenographic clerks was carried in the tariff law enacted at the extra session of this Congress. This House voted in favor of the salaries which the conferees have agreed upon. The Senate of the United States has adopted the report, and therefore has agreed to the salaries the conferees have agreed upon.

The salary of $7,000 a year for the judges of this new court is the same as the salaries paid to the judges of the circuit courts, and the salaries of the stenographic clerks are fixed at $1,600 a year, which is the salary paid to the stenographic clerks to the associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now, both Houses having voted on the proposition fixing these salaries at the amount which I have stated, the conferees felt that this would be the only opportunity Congress would have to fix the salaries of the judges of this court in accordance with the expressed will of both Houses, and we decided to include in our report the language which was originally reported to this House by the Committee on Appropriations. I think the House would have almost unanimously agreed to this provision if an opportunity to vote upon it had been given.

But it being a change of existing law, a point of order was made, and the point of order was very properly sustained. All, therefore, involved in this report that is of any consequence is the question of whether or not we will fix the salaries of the judges of the court of customs appeals at $7,000, or whether we will appropriate for their salaries, as now provided by law, at $10,000 a year. I may say, too, Mr. Speaker, that $7,000 a year for the judges of the court of customs appeals is equivalent to $8,000 a year to the judges of the circuit courts, because when the judges of the court of customs appeals travel or hold court elsewhere than in the city of Washington—and they will be traveling and holding court elsewhere almost all the time—all of their expenses are paid, including subsistence and their traveling expenses, while the circuit judge, holding court within his own circuit, is obliged to pay out of the $7,000 a year his traveling expenses and also his subsistence, and the same is true of the district judges. Therefore, $7,000 a year, with all traveling and other expenses paid, to the judges of the court of customs appeals is a great deal more than the salaries paid to the judges of the circuit courts; and I think, Mr. Speaker, we ought not to discriminate against the judges of the circuit courts of appeal by fixing these salaries at $10,000 a year.

Let me say, also, that this House has never had an opportunity to consider the question of whether or not the salaries fixed by law should be $10,000 a year. This provision came to the House as a Senate amendment on the tariff bill. It was agreed to in conference, and the House had no alternative other than to vote down the conference report or vote in favor of this provision. In view of that fact, your conferees, Mr. Speaker, felt justified in bringing this matter to the House in a way that the House might determine whether we would or would not thus discriminate against the judges of our circuit courts.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Before the gentleman takes his seat I would like to ask him a question. Does this customs court change the law so that hereafter it will be the law that these judges shall receive $7,000 a year?

Mr. TAWNEY. It does.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am disposed to vote with the gentleman on that proposition, but I would like to know what else is in this conference report.

Mr. TAWNEY. In the conference report there are only two or three items. There is one authorizing a certain amount of printing to be done for the Monetary Commission, I believe it is called, and then there is another item in regard to an agricultural exhibit to be made at one of the expositions to be held in one of the South American Republics, and this one. That is all. I will state further that the immigration amendment is not included in the report. That is still in disagreement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is there any contest about the other amendments in the conference report?

Mr. TAWNEY. None whatever.

Mr. OLCOTT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question. I would like to know whether the gentleman does not think he has made a very strong argument in favor of increasing the salaries of the district and circuit court judges?

Mr. TAWNEY. That question is not now before the House and was not before the conferees, but I think that as long as the salaries of the judges of the circuit courts is no more than $7,000, no man can justify paying the judges of the court of customs appeals $10,000 a year each.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OLCOTT. But we passed the statute making the salary $10,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LAW. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to make any extended statement in regard to this matter to-day, because I have done so on a previous occasion. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the argument of the gentleman from Minnesota, and it seems to me that he has presented a splendid argument in favor of the proposition to increase the salaries of the judges of the circuit courts. He said here that he would never stand for fixing the salaries of the judges of this court at $10,000 a year so long as the salaries of the judges of the circuit courts are $7,000 a year. I respectfully suggest to him that the remedy for that situation is to give a fair and adequate increase in the salaries of the judges of the circuit courts, rather than to decrease the salaries of the judges of the customs court of appeals.

Gentlemen, in this connection I want to call your attention to the absolute absurdity of the situation which has been created here. The court that has been created is to hear appeals from the Board of United States General Appraisers, and those from whom the appeals come. The members of the Board of General Appraisers receive salaries of $9,000 a year, while those who pass upon the appeals coming from that board, according to this conference report, should receive only $7,000 a year.

I want to say in this connection that I believe it has become proverbial that United States judges throughout the country are grossly underpaid. I do not know, gentlemen, of any better illustration of that fact than the situation we find in the great city of New York. There we have our United States district judges receiving salaries of $6,000 a year, holding judicial positions equal in dignity and importance to that of judge of the state supreme court, who receives $17,500 a year. And the additional fact that in that city justices of the peace—for that is what the municipal-court judges are—having a jurisdiction over cases involving not more than $500, receive $8,000 a year each—$8,000 in the Borough of Brooklyn and $9,000 in the Borough of Manhattan.

Gentlemen, you should also keep this in mind: I am one of those who believe that the present high cost of living is due to general causes, which are liable to be permanent in their character. I also want to call attention to the fact that $10,000 a year now is not more than $7,000 was a few years ago. I hope this motion will be defeated.

I want to say this to you, gentlemen, that this proposal to pay federal judges adequate salaries is directly in the interest of those who do not want to see our judicial and other official positions monopolized by those who are fortunately in the enjoyment of incomes from private fortunes.

The way to change this law, if it is to be changed, is by a bill introduced here for that purpose This is an attempt to change existing law. It was struck out first in the House on a point of order, and it was so amended as to simply appropriate the money for one year. And then the same old provision that was struck out on the floor of the House has been put in by the conference committee.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. LAW. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. Does the gentleman contend that these customs judges should be paid more than the circuit court judges, whose duties are certainly much more onerous and more important?

Mr. LAW. No; I do not; but I do contend that the circuit court judges should be paid more than they now receive; and the fact that they are now inadequately paid is no reason why we should continue to employ the same old system of inadequate pay to our federal judges.

Mr. GOULDEN. I agree with my colleague in that matter, but unfortunately it is not before the House at this time.

Mr. LAW. But that is not a reason why we should pay these judges an inadequate salary. If a provision were offered to increase the pay of the circuit judges to $10,000 a year, I would vote for it with the greatest pleasure.

Mr. GOULDEN. I will say to my colleague, I will do the same, but I understand we do not have the privilege or opportunity of doing so now.

Mr. LAW. But is the fact that there is not now any opportunity to increase the salaries of the circuit judges any reason why these salaries should be cut down?

Mr. GOULDEN. Yes; I think until that is done I shall not vote for these salaries to be paid. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. LAW. I yield two minutes to my colleague [Mr. PARSONS].

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague [Mr. GOULDEN] whether he thinks the judges of the United States court of customs appeals, whose work will mostly concern questions arising in New York City, ought to receive less pay than the municipal court justices in his own district receive?

Mr. GOULDEN. In answer to my colleague, I will say that so long as the circuit court judges are paid the salaries they are to-day I shall say yes to that question.

Mr. PARSONS. If the gentleman's argument is that these judges should get less because the circuit judges get less, then, as the members of the Board of General Appraisers get $9,000, why should not the judges of this court who hear the appeals from the Board of General Appraisers get more than the members of the Board of General Appraisers?

Mr. GOULDEN. I really think the general appraisers are perhaps overpaid, considering what we propose to pay these judges, and I trust some action will be taken looking toward reducing their salaries.

Mr. PARSONS. That is not contemplated now. The customs business is very largely at New York. The customs lawyers are in New York, and if you are going to have men familiar with the customs laws you will have to select judges from among the customs lawyers in New York to compose the members of this court. The federal court salaries are utterly inadequate from the standpoint of New York City. Our municipal court judges get $9,000, and their jurisdiction is under $500. The city court judges get $12,000, and their jurisdiction is only up to $2,500. Our supreme court judges get $17,500.

Mr. GOULDEN. That shows that in New York we are more liberal than the Congress of the United States is.

Mr. PARSONS. You should pay decent salaries when you get the chance.

Mr. MANN. And in New York they have to borrow money to pay the salaries.

Mr. TAWNEY. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Twelve minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the mere fact that these judges are to receive less than the men whose decisions they review need not worry anybody from the State of New York. The highest court in that State is the court of appeals. The judges of that court, as I recall, receive $12,000 a year. Justices of the supreme court in the city of New York, which court is inferior to the court of appeals, receive $17,500 a year, and a Republican legislature, in which my colleague [Mr. PARSONS] has been very influential, has been in control of the State for more than fourteen years, and it has never seen any incongruity in that situation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

More than that, Mr. Speaker, two distinguished Democrats, residents of my district, very willingly surrendered the $5,000 a year as additional salary as members of the supreme court in order to serve on the court of appeals and to enjoy the additional honor and credit and distinction that comes from service in that great court.

Now, what is the fact about this customs court of appeals? It is absolutely unnecessary. Mr. Justice Lacombe, a United States circuit judge in New York, wrote a letter when the tariff bill was under consideration, in which he said the circuit court of appeals there disposed of all the customs cases without any difficulty whatever, that this proposed court was unnecessary, and he argued against it for another and to me a much better reason. That is that it is unwise from many standpoints to have special appellate courts to consider special classes of business. There is a desire to have a special court of appeals now for every particular kind of appeals that are coming up from the courts of the country, and I am quite in accord with those who believe that if judges consider one class of cases alone it is bound to result in narrow judges, who will not develop as broadly as men who are considering all conceivable classes of business. My recollection is that the customs appeals in the city of New York, where the great bulk of this business arises, does not average over 500 cases in a year, if it averages as much. At any rate, the circuit court of appeals there has disposed of all the business promptly, efficiently, and without any inconvenience to the public service. It is necessary to fix the compensation of these judges at this time. The President has nominated men for places upon this customs court of appeals. Once they are confirmed, the Congress, under the Constitution, has no power to reduce their salaries. We must pay them the amount fixed. This court was created in the tariff bill by the Senate, and no opportunity was given to the House to consider the provision. It was stated in the last session of Congress that before these judges were confirmed the House would have an opportunity to pass upon the compensation they were to receive. Since it has been stated by such an eminent jurist as Judge Lacombe that the court is wholly unnecessary, and since those that have business with the court believe it to be unnecessary, my only regret is that the compensation has not been fixed so low that nobody would be found to serve in the court at all, and in that way allow these appeals to be sent, as they always have been up to this time, to the circuit court of appeals.

My colleague is mistaken about the compensation of the justices of the municipal courts in the city of New York; they receive $6,000 instead of $9,000.

Mr. PARSONS. But the gentleman is wrong. They receive $9,000 in the Borough of Manhattan.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is impossible to take the point of view that prevails in a great municipality like New York when the compensation for federal offices is to be fixed. Men practicing law there have held out before them unusual rewards in the pursuit of their profession. To obtain the most competent men for judicial positions, compensation must be given that will enable them to live at least in a style commensurate with the dignity of their office and position. The rest of the country will never tolerate views that residents of New York have as to compensation of federal officers.

Mr. TAWNEY. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I will only delay the House with a very brief statement. My opinion is that the House of Representatives should have the right to vote on the question of salaries of the members of the court of customs appeals separated from all the varied questions that came before the House at the time that we voted these salaries in the conference report upon the tariff bill. I am not very friendly to specialized courts anywhere, and I do not think the time has come when we should commence establishing such courts and giving them a salary higher than the judges of equal or greater dignity that have greater and more general judicial matters to dispose of.

Both the gentlemen from New York on my right seem to think that a test as to the question of the salary paid to these judges of this new court should be measured by what they pay in some parts of the city of New York. I recollect—I have not the time to turn to the act—that this court is to sit permanently, so far as it has any permanent location, in the city of Washington.

Mr. PARSONS. It is located here, but has authority to sit elsewhere, and if it wishes to convenience the people it will sit mostly in the city of New York, where most of the customs business is.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not understand that the law relating to customs is any different in the city of New York from what it will be in the city of San Francisco or in other parts of the United States. I do not know that they would go to the city of New York to get facts even though the matter in dispute arose in the city of New York. So if they should decide to go to the city of New York as a matter of convenience, away from the city of Washington where the law requires them in the first instance to meet, that would be their own lookout and should not be taken into account in fixing the judges' salaries.

Mr. PARSONS. But if five-sixths of the business of customs appeals is in the city of New York, ought they not to sit there the most of the time?

Mr. KEIFER. That is putting a question that is impossible. It might be for convenience in particular cases where they had to take a great deal of testimony that it would be better to go there, but those will be very rare cases. Although I live in the Middle West I have had some experience in customs litigation in the federal courts. I found no trouble in Cincinnati, Chicago, and Indianapolis in getting our testimony out there, and I think it is more than likely when the court takes an adjournment to different places, like Cincinnati, Chicago, San Francisco, or other places in the West where it would cost large sums of money to bring witnesses across the continent, that they might do it. But then, as has been stated by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, they would have their traveling expenses paid, their Pullman car expenses and all other expenses while absent from the city of Washington, and there is no special reason why on that account we should increase the salary. In the matter of receiving expenses, the judges of the customs court will have the advantage of the United States circuit judges and others, even the supreme judges of the United States, when they go, as they may, on the circuit. If the time is to come when the judges of the circuit court of the United States, commonly spoken of as the "judges of the circuit court of appeals," but called in the statute "judges of the circuit court"—if the time ever comes when we think we can increase their salaries, we will be able to look around and see whether the judges of these specialized courts ought to have their salaries increased also.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the gentleman have any reasonable hope of ever getting that court abolished?

Mr. MANN. Is there any way of abolishing it?

Mr. KEIFER. Not now. It might be abolished by amending the law.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is what I thought. The gentleman from Ohio ought to have made this speech last summer when we were trying to defeat that conference report.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, the gentleman from Missouri need not shake his head at me. I voted against the conference report.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Very well, then, I withdraw the remark.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the amendment that is yet in disagreement is the amendment to the Senate amendment relating to the appropriation for the Immigration Commission.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment that is still in dispute will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 39: Page 26, after line 17, insert:

"Immigration Commission: For the expenses of the commission provided for in section 39 of the act of February 20, 1907, entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States,' $125,000, to be available until December 5, 1910: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for field work, nor shall any member of said commission be entitled to or receive any salary as such member after March 1, 1910, and the said commission shall complete its entire work and make its final report, and the commission shall meet on the first Monday of December, 1910."

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House recede from its amendment to the Senate amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire whether the Clerk should not have reported the amendment as amended by the House. Is not that what is pending?

The SPEAKER. This is the Senate amendment that has been reported, which the House agreed to with an amendment. The Clerk will read the House amendment to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Agrees to amendment No. 39, with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted, insert the following: "For the expense of the commission provided for in section 39 of the act of February 20, 1907, entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States,' $65,000, to be available until May 1, 1910: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for field work, nor shall any member of said commission be entitled to or receive any salary of such member after March 1, 1910, and the said commission shall complete its entire work and make its final report when the commission shall cease on the 1st day of May, 1910."

The SPEAKER. The House on a former occasion seems to have agreed to the Senate amendment which was read, with an amendment which has just been reported.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from the amendment to the Senate amendment, and I make this parliamentary inquiry, whether or not, if the House takes that step, the Senate amendment will then stand agreed to?

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the gentleman, his motion is that the House recede from its amendment to the Senate amendment, and the House amendment was to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment. Now, it seems to the Chair, though the Chair will examine the question further, that if the House recede from its amendment, the Senate amendment would stand agreed to by that vote, since the other day we agreed to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, if the House recede from its amendment to the Senate amendment, that would leave the Senate amendment still before the House for action.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair not, because the other day the House agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment. Now, if the House recede from its amendment, it seems to the Chair that it would leave the Senate amendment agreed to, inasmuch as we agreed to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The House has never agreed to anything except the Senate amendment as amended. If it recedes from its amendment to the Senate amendment, the Senate amendment is then before the House, the House not having agreed to it up to this time, and the House might agree to it with a different amendment.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the Chair hear me for a moment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be very glad indeed to hear from the gentleman, because it is a new question.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Let me call the attention of the Chair and the gentleman from New York to the situation which would arise if the construction of the gentleman from New York were the true one. If his views are sound, then it will be necessary first for me to move that the House recede from its amendment to the Senate amendment; next, that the House recede from its agreement to the Senate amendment; and, finally, that the House proceed to agree with the very Senate amendment from agreement with which we have first voted to recede.

In other words, after the first vote to recede from our amendment, the next vote would be to disagree with the Senate amendment, and then at once another vote to agree on exactly the same proposition. Now, it is well understood in parliamentary law that a motion to disagree decided in the negative is the equivalent of an affirmative motion to agree.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does on equivalent motions.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. They are equivalent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The situation is this: The amendment of the Senate was before the House. The House agreed to that amendment in an amended form. If it recedes from the amendment of the House the Senate amendment is then before the House. The House has not concurred or nonconcurred in that amendment. The Senate amendment is then before the House and the House can concur in it, or concur with a different amendment.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman will concede that it is within my power, having the floor, to move a series of motions, to wit, according to his construction as to what is proper, first to recede from our amendment, second to nonconcur in the Senate amendment, in order to get rid of that amendment, and finally to concur in that very amendment. I think that such a contention is manifestly absurd.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can move to recede from the House amendment——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. And next to recede from our agreement, according to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Then to arrive at the purpose of the House and to test the will of the House, which I desire, I should be forced to offer a motion to agree to that to which we had just disagreed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has got in an additional motion which does not belong there.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think not. I think it would require a triple motion, where the ordinary situation would merely require a motion to recede and concur. If the gentleman's construction is correct in this case, we must first recede from our amendment, next decline to agree, and finally reverse that action and agree.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I just want to make one suggestion. I regret that I differ in my view from the point of order offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. Our concurrence to the Senate amendment was a conditional concurrence, not an absolute concurrence. Now, if the House recedes from its amendment, then we have removed the condition on which the House concurred in the Senate amendment, and I think that, therefore, leaves the Senate amendment as it was before the conditional concurrence was acted upon.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Then, may I ask what is the next motion?

Mr. TAWNEY. To concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Do you mean to say the motion I have made carries by implication a total disagreement?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No, it does not; the gentleman simply recedes from the action of the House in amending the Senate amendment.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I see the gentleman's point.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that the point made by the gentleman from Minnesota, although the Chair was inclined to take the other view of it, is well taken, namely, that the motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment was conditional with the House amendment; and it seems to the Chair that if the House should recede from its former action when it agreed to the House amendment that that would leave the proposition open either for concurring in the Senate amendment unconditionally or to a House amendment.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I think, as my motion has not yet been entertained by the House, that I will withdraw it. I move to recede from the action taken by the House in agreeing to the Senate amendment with an amendment, and in addition I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry—whether the double motion is not separable; whether the House is not entitled to vote on the separate motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that on demand it would be divisible.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the demand for a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] moves that the House recede from its amendment to the Senate amendment and agree to the Senate amendment. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] demands a division.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its amendment to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] would take precedence of the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Maybe it would. The gentleman might have shut me out by the motion for the previous question, but not having made it——

The SPEAKER. It occurs to the Chair that the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts more directly undertakes to bring the two bodies together than does the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then we will ask that the motion be divided, so that we will have a vote on the motion to recede.

The SPEAKER. The question will first be taken upon the motion to recede, under the demand for a division, from the House amendment. Will the House recede from its amendment to the Senate amendment?

Mr. TAWNEY. I think the House ought to have some explanation of the matter. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, there is no change in the situation than that which obtained the other day. If this motion carries and we then concur in the Senate amendment, the Immigration Commission will have $125,000 and plenty of time to complete their work. That is all there is to it. If you take the action desired by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] you are going to hamper the Immigration Commission both in the matter of finances and in the matter of time to complete their work. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] for three minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will yield to the gentleman from New York three minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I only desire to state what the effect of the vote on the motion will be. The House twice, on a record vote, decided that the Immigration Commission should have $65,000 with which to complete this work and should complete it by the 1st of May, 1910. If the motion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts prevails, the result will be that the commission will have $125,000 and have until the first Monday in December. If his motion be defeated, it will be an expression by the House, to be followed by an appropriate motion, that the commission shall only have $65,000 and be restricted to the 1st of May. I believe the House is fully informed as to the merits of the question. Those who desire to give the larger sum and the longer time would naturally vote "aye" on the gentleman's motion. Those desiring to give but $65,000 and a shorter time would vote in opposition to the gentleman's motion.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has correctly stated the proposition, except in this: He should have added that those in favor of the Immigration Commission completing its work at all ought then to vote down the motion to recede, and concur in the Senate amendment, because the House amendment requires the work to be completed by May 1, which can not be done, as it requires the work to be completed with an expenditure of $65,000 by May 1, 1910, which can not be done.

The Senate provision fixes the time December 1, and allows the money which after a careful investigation is found to be needed to complete the work. As I have said, the time is December 1, and the amount is $125,000 which is required for that purpose.

Mr. SHERLEY and Mr. MACON rose.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will first yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON].

Mr. MACON. The gentleman stated that $65,000 is not a sufficient sum to complete the work of this commission. I would like to ask him on what he bases that statement?

Mr. TAWNEY. On the basis of the statements made to the Committee on Appropriations when we were preparing the urgent deficiency bill, and on statements made on the floor of this House by members of that commission. That is the basis for my statement; and, further, it is also based upon the statements by Senators who have investigated the question for the purpose of determining whether or not the work could be completed before December and whether or not it could be completed for an expenditure less than $125,000.

I want to add just one word more, and that is that in my judgment the motion ought to prevail, in order that we may close up the conference report on this bill. If it is not closed up on this motion, there is no telling how soon a final agreement can be reached. The Senate insists on their amendment. If the House insists upon its amendment, of course there can be no agreement. I insist that, in order to complete the work, the commission must have the time required or provided for, and ought to have the full amount which is asked for in this Senate amendment—$125,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. KAHN rose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield first to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KAHN. Is it not a fact that one of the features of the commission's work, which is of great importance and that can not be completed unless the full amount be given, is work in connection with statistics of Japanese and other oriental laborers upon the Pacific coast?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is correct; and also Chinese.

Mr. KAHN. Is it not a fact that the number of Japanese laborers who are coming to the Pacific coast under the agreement between our Government and the Government of Japan is in controversy, and that this work of the commission will materially help to straighten that matter out?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is my understanding.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman says that if an agreement is not reached now, it will be difficult to tell when there will be an agreement. Is it not the rule that where legislation is proposed upon an appropriation bill, it is the duty of the House proposing it to yield, in the event of persistent disagreement?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is considered, perhaps, the duty of the House that proposes the legislation to yield, but as the gentleman well knows, it is not always the House proposing the legislation that does yield.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then, do I understand that it is not the gentleman's desire that the House should have its rights in these conference matters, and should continually yield to the other body?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is my desire to dispose of this report; and believing as I do that it is necessary for the commission to have the money and the time in order to complete their work, I hope the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts will prevail.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then, as I understand the position of the gentleman, in order to get rid of this conference report the House should recede from the position that it has twice taken upon a roll call and yield to the Senate?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no.

The question was put, and the Speaker announced that the Chair was in doubt.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 123, noes 95.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 146, nays 126, answered "present" 16, not voting 99, as follows:

The SPEAKER. He is not.

Mr. TILSON. I am paired with the gentleman from Arkansas, and wish to withdraw my vote and to answer "present."

Mr. OLMSTED. I am paired with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. I find that he has not voted, and I desire to change my vote to "present."

Mr. HARDWICK. I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODYARD], and for that reason desire to withdraw my vote and to answer "present."

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I am entitled to vote or not. I have just come in.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present at the time when his name should have been called?

Mr. GORDON. I was not. I have just come in.

The SPEAKER. It is too late for the gentleman to vote, under the rule.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I desire to know whether the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] voted.

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I desire to withdraw my vote and to answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced, as above recorded.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I move to concur in the Senate amendment, and on that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House do concur in the Senate amendment, and upon that motion he demands the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion to concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were, 147 ayes and 124 noes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 144, nays 125, answered "present" 15, not voting 103, as follows:

So the motion to concur was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. BRADLEY with Mr. ANDERSON.

Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. BRANTLEY.

Mr. FAIRCHILD with Mr. MCHENRY.

Mr. MCCALL with Mr. MAYNARD.

Mr. REYNOLDS with Mr. WILLETT.

Until Wednesday:

Mr. BOUTELL with Mr. LLOYD.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, on the first roll call I desire to change my vote from "aye" to "present." I find that I am paired with Mr. SPARKMAN. I saw him on the floor and thought that he voted, but find that he did not.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will be corrected so as to show that the gentleman from New York is present.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire whether the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] voted?

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire to withdraw my vote on both roll calls. I find that I am paired with the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will be corrected, and the gentleman from Kansas marked "present."

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. TAWNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the House voted to concur in the Senate amendment was, on his motion, laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had, on February 19, 1910, approved and signed joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 78. Joint resolution changing the title of the sealer of weights and measures of the District of Columbia to superintendent of weights, measures, and markets;

H. R. 15448. An act to authorize certain changes in the permanent system of highways plan, District of Columbia;

H. R. 14676. An act for the relief of the Pittsburg Brewing Company;

H. R. 7900. An act for the relief of Thomas B. Pope;

H. R. 18411. An act to authorize the Thacker Coal Mining Company to construct a footbridge across Tug River at Thacker, Mingo County, W. Va.;

H. R. 18592. An act to amend an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at Kansas City, Mo.;

H. R. 18695. An act to revive an act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, West Virginia;

H. R. 18806. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Black River near Paroquet, Ark.;

H. R. 18807. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the St. Francis River near Parkin, Ark.; and

H. R. 18808. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the White River at Augusta, Ark.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—THE OPIUM PROBLEM.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 377), which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting a report on the International Opium Commission and on the opium problem as seen within the United States and its possessions, prepared by Mr. Hamilton Wright on behalf of the American delegates to the said commission, held at Shanghai in February, 1909. In reference to this report the Secretary of State makes certain recommendations regarding an appropriation and other legislative action, which I commend to the Congress with my approval and the request that action should be taken accordingly.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 21, 1910.

By unanimous consent, reference of the bill (H. R. 18812) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to determine the amount due certain Shawnee and Delaware Indians of the United States was changed from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By unanimous consent, reference of the bill (H. R. 20376) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to determine the amount due certain Shawnee and Delaware Indians of the United States was changed from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 19028, the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question pending is the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to have the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 2, after the word "dollars," insert:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay for rent of warehouses at New York, Chicago, St. Louis, Omaha, or San Francisco."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BARTHOLDT) there were—ayes 86, noes 91.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. BURKE of South Dakota and Mr. BARTHOLDT to tell the House.

The House again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 88, noes 112.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, strike out lines 22, 23, 24, and on page 8 strike out lines 1 to 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, before that is read, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 2, after the word "hundred," insert the words "and fifteen," so that it will read: $315,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 1, after the word "telephoning," insert "rent of warehouses."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will ask the chairman of the committee if he will accept the amendment?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I can not accept the amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood the gentleman's position to now be that, recognizing the will of the House——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. O Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has offered his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For witness fees and other legal expenses incurred in suits instituted in behalf of or against Indians involving the question of title to lands allotted to them, $2,500: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used in the payment of attorney fees.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 12, after the comma following the word "them," insert the following:
"Or the right of possession of personal property held by them," so that it will read:
"Involving the question of title to lands allotted to them, or the right of possession of personal property held by them."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I now desire to recur to the paragraph which was passed, on page 6, at the bottom of the page. That paragraph was passed the other day without prejudice. When we passed it the other day a point of order offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] was pending, and I understand that he does not insist on the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, speaking for myself, I am willing to withdraw the point of order if an amendment is offered limiting the expenditures to one of the items indicated.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It is my purpose to offer an amendment in the form of a proviso, on page 7, line 18, after the word "dollars," as follows:

Provided, That not to exceed $5,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be used to conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. But I have not offered it as an amendment, Mr. Chairman. I stated I would offer it if the point of order was withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. The point of order is not withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair understands the gentleman wants the amendment reported for information.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment for information.

The Clerk reported the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Dakota, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, offers the amendment which is the same, leaving out the proviso toward the bottom of page 7——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; you are mistaken. That proviso is to remain in.

Mr. MANN. Maybe the gentleman has not offered his amendment. The Chair, however, indicated that he would rule upon the point of order reserved on the paragraph. Then the Chair was making a part of the ruling when the gentleman from South Dakota suggested that he had some law which might obviate the objection which the Chair stated. Now, if the gentleman has the law it would be a good time to produce it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have that law.

The CHAIRMAN. Just one moment. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] was temporarily in the chair when this paragraph was up the other day, and heard the arguments upon the point of order, and the present occupant did not.

Mr. MANN. It will be all argued over again, I take it. I do not think it will make any difference.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MANN. The former occupant of the chair did not hear the point the gentleman from South Dakota now has, because he did not have it then.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the statement by the Chair on the point of order indicated that the only portion of the paragraph that he considered subject to the point of order was that carried in lines 2 to 7 and the proviso in lines 18 to 21, on page 7. I stated that I was very certain there was law authorizing appropriation for preserving and removing timber from Indian reservations. I have here section 11 of the act of April 23, 1904, Thirty-third Statutes, page 304, in relation to the Flathead Indian Reservation in Montana. That section reads:

That all of said lands returned and classified by said commission as timber lands shall be sold and disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior, under sealed bids, to the highest bidder for cash or at public auction, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

Then I find a provision in the act approved April 21, 1904 (33 Stat., p. 309), relating to the Chippewa Indian Reservation, which provides that under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior the Indians are authorized to dispose of timber on their respective allotments. And then I find another act, approved March 4, 1907, having reference to the disposal of timber on the Jicarilla Indian Reservation (34 Stat., p. 1413), and then still another act, approved March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., p. 96), which reads:

That all merchantable timber on said lands, returned and classified by said commission as timber lands, shall be sold and disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior for cash under sealed bids or at public auction, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine and under such regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That after the sale and removal of the timber such of said lands as are valuable for agricultural purposes shall be sold and disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior and in such manner and under such regulations as he may prescribe.

Then, Mr. Chairman, I find in Twenty-fifth Statutes, page 673—

That the President of the United States may, from year to year, in his discretion, under such regulations as he may prescribe, authorize the Indians residing on reservations or allotments, the fee for which remains in the United States, to sell, cut, remove, fell, or otherwise dispose of dead timber, standing or fallen, on said reservation or allotment, for the sole benefit of said Indian or Indians; but whenever there is reason in any case to believe that such timber has been killed, burned, girdled, or otherwise injured for the purpose of securing its sale under this act, then and in that case such authority shall not be granted.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this clearly authorizes, beyond any question, the appropriation contained in this paragraph, and I will send these citations to the Chair in order that he may examine them.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chaiman, I think the gentleman from South Dakota, the very able chairman of the Indians Committee, is mistaken in reference to the suggestions of the gentleman who occupied the chair on Saturday. I did not understand the occupant of the chair to rule that the various provisions of this paragraph were in order, with the exception of the proviso and the exception of the sale of timber. On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, every one of the four different propositions of this paragraph is subject to a point of order, unless it be the one providing an appropriation for matrons. The first provision of the paragraph is:

To conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms designed to test the possibilities of soil or climate in the cultivation of trees, etc.

There is no provision of law suggested as warranting that provision of the bill, unless it is claimed that section 2071 of the Revised Statutes provides for it. The distinguished chairman of the Indian Committee on Saturday claimed that section 2071 of the Revised Statutes authorized these different provisions of this paragraph. Let me call the attention of the Chair to what section 2071 is:

The President may in every case where he shall judge improvement in the habits and conditions of such Indians practicable, and that the means of instruction can be introduced with their consent, employ persons of good moral character to instruct them in the mode of agriculture suited to their situation, and for teaching their children in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and to perform such other duties as may be enjoined according to such instructions and rules as the President may give and prescribe for the regulation of their conduct in the discharge of their duties.

The only provision in that section is authorizing the President to employ persons. That authority to employ persons is conferred upon certain conditions, and those persons are to exercise certain authority in education in certain ways, but the only authority that is granted is to employ persons.

Now, the propositions involved in this paragraph, outside of matrons and farmers, is not to employ persons at all. It is to do things, quite a different proposition, and certainly the authority to employ a person to teach does not warrant an appropriation to conduct experiments on Indian school farms designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in relation to the cultivation of anything. I think that disposes of the first proposition in the paragraph.

The second proposition in the paragraph is:

For the purpose of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations.

I do not know of any authority of law for that, although it may possibly exist. There is no doubt that Congress may appropriate to carry out the provisions of law authorizing the sale of timber under certain conditions as prescribed by Congress upon Indian reservations, and if this paragraph in reference to the sale of timber be construed to mean that they shall only conduct such timber operations when provided by law, it is not objectionable, so far as the point of order is concerned. But if it be construed to mean that they may conduct such timber operations and sales of timber as may be advisable, and also as provided by law, then it is subject to the point of order, and the occupant of the chair on Saturday was of the opinion that it was entitled to the latter construction; and in the former paragraph the section in relation to the employment of practical farmers and stockmen, it provides that they shall be subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. That is legislation, and is not in order on an appropriation bill over a point of order. Of course the proviso is plainly subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The statute, extracts from which the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] has sent to the Chair, relates to specific tribes or reservations, namely, the Flathead, Chippewa, and Jicarilla. The paragraph in question seems to be limited.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What about the section of the statute that I cited last, Mr. Chairman? That does not refer to any particular reservation. That is general legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the act of February 16, 1889. It reads as follows:

That the President of the United States may from year to year, in his discretion, under such regulations as he may prescribe, authorize the Indians residing on reservations or allotments, the fee to which remains in the United States, to fell, cut, remove, or otherwise dispose of the dead timber, standing or fallen, on said reservation or allotment for the sole benefit or such Indian or Indians.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I believe the rule to be that an appropriation which is authorized, if it has reference even to a specific purpose, is to be given the benefit of the presumption that it will be used within the authority of law. It seems to me that there is sufficient authority here to warrant an appropriation to be expended for this purpose; we can not assume that the administrative office will use any part except as provided by law.

The CHAIRMAN. If that were the intention, it would be very easy to specify it in the bill. The Chair must consider the language of the bill. Now, the act of 1889, just read, provides that the President may authorize Indians to remove dead timber, and so forth. This paragraph appropriates money for that purpose. That does not seem to be within the meaning and intendment of the act of 1889, which states that the Indians are to do it. It does not contemplate any expense to the Government in connection therewith.

The first part of the paragraph, in relation to conducting experiments on Indian school or agency farms in the cultivation of trees, grains, and so forth, seems to the Chair to be fairly covered by section 2071 of the Revised Statutes, which says that—

The President may, in every case where he shall judge improvement in the habits and conditions of such Indians practicable and that the means of instruction can be introduced with their consent, employ persons of good moral character to instruct them in the mode of agriculture suited to their situation—and for teaching their children in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and to perform such other duties as may be enjoined according to such instructions and rules as the President may give and prescribe for the regulation of their conduct in the discharge of their duties.

That is very broad language—

That is very broad language. But it is, perhaps, unimportant to consider it further here, for if there is any provision in the paragraph which renders it subject to the point of order, then, of course, the whole paragraph must go out. The Chair has just indicated one such provision. Furthermore, the provision in line 13:

Subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

In the opinion of the Chair this does mean to confer upon the Secretary by legislation power and discretion which he does not now possess. Then we come to the provision:

That the amounts paid to matrons, farmers, and stockmen herein provided for shall not come within the limit for employees fixed by the act of June 7, 1897.

It seems to the Chair that that proviso changes existing law, in violation of Rule XXI.

The Chair is therefore compelled to rule, as the previous occupant of the Chair [Mr. BOUTELL] was about to rule when the paragraph was up before, that the point of order must be sustained.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the following amendment, and in connection therewith I would like to have the proviso added as a part of it, which I sent to the Clerk's desk a moment ago.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 23, page 6, insert:

"To conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits; for the employment of suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian women housekeeping and other household duties, at a rate not to exceed $60 per month, and for furnishing necessary equipments and renting quarters for them where necessary; and for the employment of practical farmers and stockmen, in addition to the agency and school farmers now employed, to superintend and direct farming and stock raising among Indians, $250,000: Provided, That not to exceed $5,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be used to conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruit."

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to say further than that the paragraph is exactly as it was when offered here, eliminating that portion the Chair held was subject to the point of order.

Mr. MANN. For the same amount, too? Of course it is still subject to the point of order as far as the proviso is concerned.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The amount remains the same, although you have stricken out one of the items.

Mr. MANN. Then I make the point of order on it. I call the attention of the Chair to the first proposition, although the Chair has indicated an opinion in respect to that, that the question of experiments might be covered by section 2071 of the statutes. It must be perfectly patent to everyone, I think, that the conduct of experiments designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits, using Indian labor in the process, is not for the employment of "persons" and is not confined to the employment of "persons." It is not expected that there will be any money spent except in the employment of "persons." Now, the only authority granted in section 2071 of the Revised Statutes is to employ "persons." Those "persons" are to do certain things. The President is authorized to employ those "persons" under certain conditions. The President is not authorized to expend a cent in any direction except in the employment of "persons." If the Chair will analyze that section of the statutes, he will see that it would read as though the President might employ "persons of good moral character to instruct," and so forth, "and for the performance of such other duties as may be enjoined." But those duties are to be performed by them, by the "persons" employed by the President.

If this provision was to employ persons to conduct experiments at Indian schools, it would be in order; but the only money that could be expended out of it would be for the salaries or wages of the persons employed, but this item as it reads will certainly authorize the purchase of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits. It confines the employment of persons to Indian labor in the process, which changes the authority in section 2071, even as to the employment of persons, and is therefore to that extent a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 2071 of the Revised Statutes is pretty broad in its provisions and should not be so technically construed as to defeat its intentions. Without further elaboration and referring to what has already been said by the Chair upon this portion of the paragraph, the Chair overrules the point of order. The question is upon the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to putting the proviso in that amendment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer as an amendment the proviso found on page 7, line 18, inserting the word "further" after the word "provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment just adopted the following words:
"Provided further, That the amounts paid to matrons, farmers, and stockmen herein provided for shall not come within the limit for employees fixed by the act of June 7, 1897."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. For expenses of the Board of Indian Commissioners, $4,000, including not to exceed $300 for office rent.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice the gentleman has sectioned the various appropriations, which, of course, is unusual. I should like to inquire what is the occasion for that?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It is merely a change of form. There is no particular reason, except that it is easier to refer to the bill if it is sectioned than if it is simply in paragraphs running one after the other without any designation by sections. Heretofore there were headings in the bill, but the committee left those out and divided the bill into sections.

Mr. MANN. I do not know but it may be an improvement, although it is the first appropriation bill I have ever seen anywhere that had sections covering the appropriations.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It is for convenience of reference, that is all.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingencies of the Indian service; for traveling and incidental expenses of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and other officers and employees in the Indian service, including clerks detailed from the Bureau of Indian Affairs for special service in the field; for traveling and incidental expenses of special agents, at $3 per day when actually employed on duty in the field, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-car fare, in lieu of all other expenses, including expenses of going to and from the seat of government and while remaining there under orders; for pay of employees not otherwise provided for; and for pay of special agents at $2,000 per annum each, $108,000.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I should like to ask the gentleman whether there was any special reason for leaving out the limitation which has been in the Indian bills for some time, about persons who come to Washington and remain under orders, as to the length of time they can remain? Heretofore the limitation has been for a period not to exceed twenty days.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, that provision was put into the bill some years ago. I was a member of the committee when it was done, and it was thought it would have the effect of keeping from Washington, when not required here, persons in the Indian Service. We have found, however, that it happens occasionally that some officer is detained here on official business for more than twenty days, and in order to comply with the statute it has been necessary to send him to Baltimore or New York or some near-by point for a day or two, and then permit him to return. It was simply done in the interest of better administration.

Mr. MANN. I should not think that was a compliance with the statute. I should think it was a direct violation of the statute which ought to subject the man who did it to removal from office.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Doubtless it was a circumvention of the law, but we understand there was necessity for it, and something of that kind in actual practice occasionally occurred.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the work of constructing an irrigation system for the irrigation of the lands of the Pima Indians in the vicinity of Sacaton, in the Gila River Indian Reservation, $75,000: Provided, That the amount hereby appropriated and all moneys heretofore or hereafter to be appropriated for this project shall be repaid into the Treasury of the United States in accordance with the provisions of section 10 of the act of March 3, 1905: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall transmit to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1910, a statement showing the original estimated cost, the present estimated cost, and the total amount of all moneys, from whatever source derived, expended thereon, of each irrigation project for which specific appropriation is made in this act, to and including June 30, 1910, and annually thereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall transmit to Congress a cost account of all moneys, from whatever source derived, expended on each such irrigation project for the preceding fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I offer an amendment, to insert, after the word "heretofore," in line 1, page 10, the word "herein."

Mr. MANN. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if this is not covered by the language on page 4?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the other provision is a general provision, and has reference entirely to projects on Indian reservations; this has reference to specific projects, projects for which we are making specific appropriations, and it was put in in order that a like requirement would be applicable to all specific appropriations.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will not insist on the point of order, but I hope the gentleman will compare the two provisions hereafter. I am inclined to think that what is on page 10 is already covered by making that permanent law on page 4. Of course there is no occasion for making a duplication.

I want to say in that respect that I think the provisions suggested by the Committee on Indian Affairs and its distinguished chairman are of exceeding great value to us. We are engaged in a lot of irrigation projects throughout the country, without knowing the cost, without knowing whether the money is properly expended or not, and without knowing what benefits they will be, and we ought to have the information asked for here. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the chairman a question. In lines 13 and 14, page 10, there is this peculiar phrase, "and cost account of all moneys," and so forth. What does that mean?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. An account showing the different purposes for which the money is expended, divided up into subjects.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It does not seem to say that.

Mr. MANN. It is a bookkeeping phrase.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is what is meant by cost account. It is a technical phrase of bookkeeping, but I think it is well understood, and there will be no misunderstanding about its application.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It may be understood over there, but I think it will puzzle the casual reader very much.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think it will bring the information desired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I want to call attention to the fact that it applies to the preceding year. It says:

On such irrigation projects for the preceding fiscal year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Has there ever been any account rendered by anybody as to how much these irrigation projects are costing and are expected to cost?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There does not seem to have been a report to Congress on the subject, and this committee thought we ought to have a detailed statement giving all the information that this paragraph seeks to bring out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "heretofore," line 1, page 10, insert the word "herein."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction of a bridge and the necessary approaches thereto across the Little Colorado River at or near Tanners Crossing on the Navajo Indian Reservation in Coconino County, Territory of Arizona, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman in reference to this. I will state to the gentleman before he replies, that we have pending in the committee, of which I happen to be chairman, two bills, each appropriating $50,000, for bridges in one of the Southwestern Territories, and have given some consideration to the subject, but have been unable so far to ascertain the information sufficient to know what the bridge will cost, or anything at all in reference to the plans for it. I would like to know if the committee has been able to get the information?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the committee considered this matter with some care. While it is unable to give detailed information in the form of an estimated cost of the bridge, it was and is of the opinion that it could be built for $50,000; that there is necessity for it we are well satisfied. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON], a member of the committee, is quite familiar with the necessities for its construction, and I will yield to him to make a statement in regard to the matter.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this proposed bridge is to be constructed across the Little Colorado River, some 60 miles north of Flagstaff, at a point on the western boundary of the Navajo Reservation. The first settlement, or the Navajo supply point, is about 30 miles beyond the present crossing. There are practically no people living between Flagstaff and what is known as Tuba City, which is one of the large distributing points of supplies for the western part of the Navajo Reservation.

In fact, they have a large Indian school and mission there, and it is one of the largest agencies that we have. All of the supplies that are furnished to the western part of the reservation are freighted from the railroad station at Flagstaff or Canon Diablo. This river, known as the Little Colorado, is a very dangerous stream. It is full of quicksands, and at times it is impossible to ford it for weeks, sometimes three weeks at a time. There have been a great many supplies lost by the Indian freighters traveling between Flagstaff and the reservation. There has been a lot of wool lost and a great many supplies and a number of teams and some lives.

This matter has been given very thorough consideration by the Indian Department, and it is very desirous that this bridge should be built by the Indian Department or by the United States Government for the protection of the lives of the Indians and their property. At times there is no way to get supplies across the river, as I have said, for several weeks, and they have at times been very short of supplies on the western part of the reservation. There have been a number of bridge experts who have looked this matter over, and it has been stated by some of the reliable bridge companies of the United States that a bridge can be built for $50,000. Some estimate more and some estimate less, but I contend that $50,000 is a fair appropriation for this bridge, and I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order, because I believe it is money that will be well expended for the benefit of the Indians, and the Government can well afford to do it.

Mr. MANN. Is this bridge proposed to be constructed for the benefit of the Indians or the benefit of the citizens of Arizona?

Mr. CAMERON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that 95 per cent of the people that will use this bridge will be Indians, and more than 95 per cent of the goods they carry across it will be used by the Indians.

Mr. MANN. Why should we pay for the bridge out of the Federal Treasury and not out of the Indian money?

Mr. CAMERON. There is no money, as I understand it, in the Treasury to the credit of the Navajo Indians.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, we have not any in our own Treasury to speak of. [Laughter.] They have large numbers of Indians and get great quantities of supplies, and they can get their supplies cheaper and sell their wool at a higher price than before, and I should think they might manage to get some money to build a bridge.

Mr. CAMERON. This tribe does not have any money in the Treasury at present.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say they had lost large quantities of wool at this crossing?

Mr. CAMERON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Where did the wool come from—the Indians?

Mr. CAMERON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Well, I am inclined to think——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. MANN. I will withhold it if the gentleman desires, but I shall insist upon it after he is through talking.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The committee thought that it is the duty of the United States Government to build this bridge for the reason, as stated by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON], that these Indians are poor, and they have very poor lands. They have quite a large extent of land in Arizona, but it is only good for grazing purposes.

Mr. MANN. Arizona?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Arizona, that we are about to admit as a State. Why, I heard the gentleman making a speech not long ago in which he said it is a flowering Eden. The gentleman ought not to make this speech until after the bill for the admission of Arizona becomes a law, because if he discloses the whole truth we might want to repeal it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Have we not already had passed the Arizona statehood bill through this House?

Mr. MANN. Well, the Senate has not passed upon it yet, and it will come back with amendments, undoubtedly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope the gentleman will not go back on his own party's platform and vote against the Arizona statehood bill.

Mr. MANN. But the platform was perhaps agreed to under a mistaken idea that this land was arable.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Navajo Indian lands are the worst lands in the Territory, and that is the reason we gave them to the Indians. The gentleman asked the question why it was necessary that the Government should build this bridge. This is a very large reservation, and the old reservation is on the northwest side of the Little Colorado River. As stated by the gentleman from Arizona, it is a dangerous river, and these Indians have to cross that river to get to the railroad, where they get all of their supplies and do all of their trading.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is the river navigable at this place?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; it is a very dangerous river; it is not navigable. There is a small canyon just below where this bridge will be placed, and the Grand Canyon is just below the junction of the two rivers.

Mr. MANN. How many acres are there in the Navajo Indian Reservation?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not know, but I suppose that the original reservation is more than 30 miles square, and recently most of the land between the county seat at Flagstaff and the river was made an additional reservation, by executive proclamation, for the use of these Navajo Indians. All of their property consists of burros, horses, goats, and sheep. They do very little farming.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says they have 900 square miles of territory on his estimate, as I understand, and that is too small.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said it was 30 miles square.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; and there are more than a thousand Indians now occupying this reservation trying to live by raising stock on the range mainly.

Mr. MANN. How many Indians are in this 900 square miles of territory, which is over 500,000,000 acres of land?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is impossible to state, because the country is mountainous and the Indian settlements scattered, and a great deal of the land is entirely worthless except for grazing purposes. They have no water for irrigation on the mesas or uplands, and but very little except on the river, and occasionally springs are found that would irrigate a few acres. This is one of the most arid parts of the West and of very little use, except for grazing purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon his order?

Mr. MANN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from South Dakota whether this proposed bridge is to be constructed upon land belonging to the Government?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I presume, Mr. Chairman, it is. It is to be constructed upon the Indian reservation, and I assume that the fee is in the Government of the United States and that the Indians simply have the right of possession.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there a road leading to and from this bridge?

Mr. CAMERON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. By whom was that constructed?

Mr. CAMERON. It was constructed in the early days by the Indians and the settlers in that country. It is one of the old roads, a part of which was formerly known as the "old Beale trail," which ran through that country in the early history, and it is kept up now by the Indians, but on that part adjacent to the town of Flagstaff it is kept up by the county. There is very little travel on that road other than Indian travel, a few white men occasionally, and the Indian trade that goes out to the west part of the reservation, and for your information I would like to state, Mr. Chairman, that by executive order of January 8, 1900, 1,358,398 acres were taken away from Coconino County and annexed to the Navajo Reservation. That deprives the county in which I live of that many acres of grazing land where we used to have hundreds of thousands of head of sheep and a great many thousand head of cattle, and for which we are not reimbursed in any way. On the other hand, we have been deprived of thousands of acres in national forests, so, naturally, we have been left with but little land and taxable property in that county; and it seems now, the department wishing to establish this bridge, that we should be entitled at least to some consideration before this House, and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. This road seems to have been built by private capital, and of late years kept in order by the county. It being in the nature of a county rather than a government road, it hardly comes within the exception to the rule, which exception permits appropriations in continuation of a public work in progress. Upon this state of facts, and no authority of law for the appropriation having been shown, the Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, after line 7, insert:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make an investigation of the conditions on the Navajo Indian Reservation in Coconino County, in the Territory of Arizona, with respect to the necessity of the construction of a bridge at or near Tanners Crossing on said reservation, and also to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made, together with estimate of the maximum limit of cost for the construction of a suitable bridge at that place, and submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1910, and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purposes herein authorized."

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order upon that. I wish the gentleman would strike out the word "maximum," where it reads "maximum cost."

Mr. CAMERON. I will submit to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so amended.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Then I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. For support and civilization of Indians in California, including pay of employees, and for the purchase of small tracts of land situated adjacent to lands heretofore purchased, and for improvements on lands for the use and occupancy of Indians in California, $42,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. I want to secure some information from some member of the committee about the purchase of small tracts of lands situated adjacent to lands heretofore purchased. What is the necessity for that?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, a few years ago authority was given to purchase 2,000 acres of land in California to provide homes for some wandering, homeless Indians of that State. This is simply to extend that work and purchase additional lands to provide homes for those that are not already provided for.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How much land do you propose to purchase by means of this appropriation?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. A small amount. My recollection is they get 5 or 10 acres apiece.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What is the total number of Indians the gentleman proposes to provide for?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Altogether, I think, in that State there were about, it seems to me, 2,000 Indians, but I am not certain.

Mr. HAYES. Three thousand five hundred.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Three thousand five hundred of these homeless Indians in that State, comprising, I think, thirty or forty different tribes of Indians.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What tribes are they?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I can not say; but the Mission Indians, I know, are among them.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What does that land cost per acre? Is it expensive land?

Mr. MANN. Most of this appropriation is not used for the purpose of purchasing land.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How much of it was used for that purpose?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not remember. I have that information, and I can get it. Not much of it is used for that purpose.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What is it used for?

Mr. MANN. For the support of the Indians.

Mr. COX of Indiana. It says:

For the purchase of small tracts of land situated adjacent to lands heretofore purchased.

Mr. MANN. The point is properly and well made. I have gone over that same language before. There may be a small amount used for the purchase of land, but only a small amount of it. That would be an exceptional case. Money is appropriated for the support of the Indians. Last year it was segregated into two items.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How much last year was used for the purchase of land?

Mr. MANN. I am unable to say.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It is a very small matter.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How much was used in the last appropriation for the purchase of land?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will read the following for the benefit of the gentleman:

In purchasing lands for the California Indians authority is first procured from the Secretary of the Interior to expend so much money in the purchase of so many acres for the various bands of Indians. The deeds run "To the United States of America," but do not disclose the name of the band for whom the purchase is intended.

Before a purchase of this land is consummated the deeds are passed on by the Attorney-General to see if the title as shown by the abstract is in the party from whom the lands are to be purchased and if the deeds are sufficient to vest good title in the United States.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman, then, has no data showing how much land is appropriated for?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Something like 1,200 or 1,500 acres, but I am not able to state accurately how much.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman give any information as to how many acres of land are proposed to be purchased by this appropriation?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I can not say exactly; it would depend on how much they have to pay for the land.

Mr. COX of Indiana. But you say it is disposed of in small tracts?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman from California will be able to give us information on that point.

Mr. SMITH of California. I am not able to give the gentleman specific figures; but these Mission Indians are located in my district, and I have some knowledge of the work that has been going on there of recent years, trying to put them upon a self-sustaining basis.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Have they been successful in doing so heretofore?

Mr. SMITH of California. Yes; they have made great progress. The matter was taken up by some civic Indian societies—I do not remember their names—and President Jordan, of Stanford University, with several other gentlemen, has taken the matter in hand.

Mr. COX of Indiana. He is a good man; he is from Indiana.

Mr. SMITH of California. They have purchased land suitable for cultivation, and there has been some money expended in the way of irrigation, and in a very large measure they have been able to make these Indians self-sustaining, whereas before they were in a miserable condition and a burden and charge upon the Government. Now, the amount of the lands will not be large, and it will not be expensive. The farms are located in a country where they are away back in the foothills, away back from general settlement.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman know how much altogether they have gotten for this purpose?

Mr. HAYES. If the gentleman will permit me, they have purchased altogether for these homeless Indians 1,300-odd acres of land.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What is the land worth per acre?

Mr. SMITH of California. Probably $10 an acre.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I think I can state the proposition to the satisfaction of the gentleman. I could give data if I had a little time; but the purchase of lands for these homeless Indians has been going on in California for some three or four years, and we have had an annual appropriation of $50,000 for that purpose. At the beginning there were 3,500 homeless and wandering Indians in California. I think they are all practically settled on land, except possibly two, three, or four hundred, and it is proposed by this appropriation to finish up this work entirely, as I understand it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. To finish the work begun heretofore?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 550 Indian pupils at the Sherman Institute, Riverside, Cal., and for pay of superintendent, $94,350; for general repairs and improvements, $10,000; for a new dormitory, $15,000; for a new hospital, $15,000; in all, $134,350.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment:

Page 11, following line 25, insert:

"For the support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Grand Junction, Colo., $33,400, and pay of superintendent, $1,600: Provided, That if said school is disposed of as authorized by the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, approved March 3, 1909, the provisions of which act with reference to said school are hereby extended to July 1, 1911, only the pro rata share of the appropriation therefor for the portion of the year which the school is maintained by the United States shall be available."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I reserve the point of order on the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. In explanation of the amendment, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that the amount for this school named in the amendment is the same as that carried in the Indian appropriation bill for the present fiscal year. The appropriation was omitted from this bill for the reason that the Indian appropriation bill for the present fiscal year carried a conditional donation or grant of this school to the State of Colorado; and it was presumed by the Commissioner of the Indian Office, and probably by the Committee on Indian Affairs, that the grant had been accepted; and therefore it was not necessary to provide for the maintenance of the school for the next fiscal year. But the grant to the State of Colorado was not accepted for this reason: It would require an appropriation by the State of Colorado to maintain this institution as a school, as provided by the terms of the grant or donation, and the present Indian appropriation act was not passed and finally approved until March 3, 1909. That was in the last month, practically the closing days, of the last session of the Colorado legislature, and under the constitution of Colorado no bills can be introduced after the first thirty days of the session, and the first thirty days happened to occur in January, 1909, more than a month before the passage of this act of Congress.

It is doubtful if this act of donation was ever officially or otherwise called to the attention of the legislature of Colorado at any time during the session; but, for the reason I have stated, if its attention had been called to it in March, 1909, the legislature was absolutely helpless, under this constitutional prohibition, to make the necessary appropriation to enable the governor to accept this grant, and it will be necessary to provide for the continuance of the school another year or such part thereof as it may remain unaccepted, or it will lead to the closing of the school, denying to these wards of the Government the means of education and perhaps compelling the Indian Office to provide therefor in some other manner.

Mr. HINSHAW. How many pupils are in attendance there, as nearly as the gentleman can say?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I could not give you the exact number. I will say this, however: I happened to be at Grand Junction last fall when President Taft visited that city, had the pleasure of accompanying him on that trip through the city, and the Indian pupils there were lined up to be reviewed by the President, and were reviewed by him, and I noticed a very long line of them. There appeared to be between 100 and 200 pupils in line.

Mr. HINSHAW. From what section or what tribe are they?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. They must be Utes very largely, because that vicinity was tributary to the great Ute Indian Reservation before they were removed to Utah.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman on its merits. In fact, the committee authorized such an amendment. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under date of February 18, in response to an inquiry from the Committee on Indian Affairs, wrote the letter which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 18, 1910.

Hon. CHARLES H. BURKE,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated February 14, 1910, relative to an appropriation for the Grand Junction Indian School, Colorado, and the continuance in force and effect of the grant as set forth in the current appropriation act of that school to the State of Colorado.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs informs me, after a review of the entire question, that it appears uncertain whether the legislature of the State of Colorado will accept the grant during the special session to be held in April, 1910, and that, in view of this fact, it is deemed advisable to maintain this school for another year.

If this is done there should be, in addition to the usual appropriation for the support and education of pupils and the pay of superintendent, an item of $4,000 for repairs, in order that the school plant may be kept in proper condition.

I therefore favor the insertion of an item in the bill making an appropriation for this school, including repairs, for the fiscal year 1911, and the continuance of the grant as set forth in the current appropriation act to the State of Colorado until June 30, 1911.

A proviso also should be inserted to the effect that if the said school is disposed of during the fiscal year 1911 the pro rata share only of the appropriation for the maintenance of the said school for the portion of the year which the school is maintained by the United States shall be available.

Very respectfully, R. A. BALLINGER, Secretary.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, it has been the policy of the Indian Office and of the Committee on Indian Affairs to dispense with Indian schools as fast as possible and consolidate them into larger and better schools; but there has been no purpose, either on the part of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or of this committee, to dispense with schools unless other provision has been made for the accommodation of the pupils; and as it appears that the legislature of the State of Colorado has not taken over this school, as it ultimately will probably——

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. As it could not do for the reasons I have given——

Mr. HINSHAW. For the reasons stated by the gentleman, the committee has no objection to the amendment, especially in view of the recommendation of the commissioner, and since it appears that it will be unnecessary to use all the appropriation should the State of Colorado in the meantime take over the schools before the expiration of the next fiscal year.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to insist upon the point of order, but desire to offer an amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Colorado.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the gentleman from South Dakota offers a further amendment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. An amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment the following:

"Provided further, That if such property is not accepted by the State of Colorado, as hereinbefore provided, and also if the State of Colorado does not accept the Fort Lewis Indian School, as provided by act approved March 3, 1909, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to dispose of and convey the real estate, including buildings and fixtures, of the said Grand Junction School and Fort Lewis School to the highest bidder for cash at not less than an appraised valuation to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, the same to be subject to his approval and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe; and he is also hereby authorized and directed to dispose, by sale or transfer, to other government Indian schools such property as is not covered by the transfer of the realty, buildings, and fixtures."

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. May I ask the gentleman from South Dakota a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Does that amendment couple both of those together, so that the acceptance of both of them is necessary to the acceptance of either?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No. If the State accepts one or the other, whichever one it does not accept may be sold. If it accepts both, of course neither will be sold.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will be glad to accept the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 4, page 11, the following:

"For the support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Fort Lewis, Colo., $35,000, and for pay of superintendent, $1,600: Provided, That if said school is disposed of as authorized by the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, approved March 3, 1909, the provisions of which act with reference to said school are hereby extended to July 1, 1911, only the pro rata share of the appropriation therefor for the portion of the year which the school is maintained by the United States shall be available."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. To that amendment I reserve a point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, in explanation of this amendment, that Fort Lewis is in the same category with Grand Junction. The same conditional grant was made to Colorado and the grant has not been accepted by the governor of the State, because no appropriation was made or could be made by the legislature at the time this act passed at the second session of the Sixtieth Congress, and unless the school is appropriated for in the present appropriation bill it must be closed.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will have to insist upon the point of order, Mr. Chairman. It changes existing law by extending the time by one year within which the State of Colorado has to accept this grant.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SMITH of California). If the statement made by the gentleman from South Dakota can not be controverted or explained, it would appear that the amendment does change existing law by changing the time in which the State of Colorado was permitted certain things, and the Chair would sustain the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The grant of the school was made in an Indian appropriation bill, and I see no reason why it could not be extended by an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It could be extended by the permission of the committee, but not against a point of order. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. For the purpose of investigating the conditions of the Seminole Indians in Florida and the Alabama Indians in Texas, $5,000; and the Secretary of the Interior is directed to report the result of such investigation to Congress at the next session.

Mr. MANN. To that paragraph I reserve a point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask whether the purpose of this paragraph is to ascertain the needy condition of the Indians, perchance to a possible view of appropriating money for their support?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The purpose is to cause to be investigated the conditions of the Indians in Florida who have been living for the past one hundred years in what are known as the Everglades, and a few Indians in Texas that are without means of support. In fact, they have no status at present. The Indians in Florida, it is said, are getting into a very destitute condition, and something must be done for them in the near future or they will die from starvation.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] is more familiar with the condition of the Alabama Indians in his State, but it is the understanding of the committee that it is much the same as that of the Indians in Florida. The committee thought that we ought to make some provision for an investigation that would give us information as to just what their condition is.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state to the gentleman from Illinois that the Alabama Indians came to Texas about a hundred years ago, as far as we can tell, and they settled in southeastern Texas, in Polk County, near the Gulf. At that time the country was wild, and they had an opportunity to fish and hunt and roam at will. Since the country has been settled the land has become valuable and fenced, and they can no longer follow their old habits of roaming over the country at will, hunting and fishing, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be a good thing if they followed new habits?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It would; and I will say, then, there are between one and two hundred of these homeless, roaming Indians. It is a tribe that was driven from Alabama, and this tribe gave the name of Alabama to that State.

Mr. MANN. Then it would seem that Alabama ought to make a contribution.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It was in the early part of the last century, possibly one hundred years ago, that the tribe emigrated to the West with a great many other Indians that came from east of the Mississippi River and settled west of the river. These Indians had 960 acres given them by the State of Texas. They have been on that small reservation for the last thirty or forty years, but now since the country has been fenced up by white persons they are becoming more and more dependent. Formerly they were permitted to roam over the country and hunt and fish at will.

Now their condition is becoming deplorable, and while we have plenty of public lands in the West I think those Indians should be provided for. It requires nothing but an executive proclamation of the President to set apart a few thousand acres of land for these starving Indians, and before the land is all taken up with forest reserves I think that ought to be done.

Mr. MANN. Why does the gentleman call them starving Indians? Can not they work?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are not accustomed to it and do not know how to work.

Mr. MANN. Then they ought to starve.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There are a great many white people who do not like to work.

Mr. MANN. But we do not support the white people.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Are they citizens?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman said that the State of Texas gave them so many hundred acres of land.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The legislature granted them the land.

Mr. COX of Indiana. So the fee simple is now in those Indians?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes. The land is not of great value. I do not know what it is worth. It is in the district of my friend Mr. DIES, 900 or 1,000 miles from where I live.

Mr. MANN. These Indians have been self-supporting for how long a time?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Two hundred years.

Mr. MANN. And the Seminoles in Florida—oh, well, self-supporting! Why, a man can live down there without working anyway.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Of course.

Mr. MANN. I own a place in Florida and I know something about it. They can do it now by fishing and hunting.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Our Texas Indians can not because of our stringent game laws. If these Indians were to go onto somebody else's property hunting without the landowner's permission they would be in jail in twenty-four hours.

Mr. MANN. I own a good many thousand acres of land in Florida, and you can hunt all over it and nobody will pay any attention to you.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. MANN. The point of order is that there is no authority in law for this appropriation at all; there is no treaty agreement under which the Government is bound to support these Indians or to make inquiry in regard to them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to be advised by the gentleman from Illinois or some one as to just what the line is where the Government may expend money for the support of Indians and where it may not. Do I understand we can only expend money in this bill for Indians with which we have treaty relations?

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to argue any proposition save the one pending before the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand; but that is involved.

Mr. MANN. That is for the Chair to decide, but I do not think so. I do not think that is involved here at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is seeking information from the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I understand. There is no treaty obligation here. If there were a treaty obligation here, of course we would be bound to carry out the treaty. Without a treaty obligation, the question is whether there is any general provision of the statute which covers the question. This is not for the purpose of supporting the Indians, but for the purpose of investigating the condition of certain tribes of Indians, where there is no treaty obligation to support.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have two precedents for this. One is the Indians that were mentioned a few moments ago—the California Mission Indians. There were numerous bands of those Mission Indians scattered over California, and four years ago we made an appropriation to gather them together and give them lands in different reservations. The appropriation for these California Mission Indians made by us a few moments ago was exactly on all fours with this case. Those Indians were scattered all over California, and our Texas and Florida Indians are in exactly the same condition. Another precedent is this: The Big Jim band of Indians were up in the Dakotas, and that band was part of the time in Canada and part of the time in the United States. They became a nuisance in that northwest country, and we passed an act appropriating money to put them on a reservation. There are other precedents for this proposed appropriation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say just a word on the point of order. Section 2114 of the Revised Statutes provides:

That the President is authorized to exercise general superintendence and care over any tribe or nation of Indians that was removed upon an exchange of territory under the authority of the act of May 28, 1830.

In that act of May 28, 1830, it was provided in section 7:

And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for the President to have the same superintendence and care over any tribe or nation in the country to which they may be removed as contemplated by this act that he is now authorized to have over them at their present place of residence.

Now, those Indians down in Florida never have been removed, consequently the President has the jurisdiction over those Indians that he had, whatever it was, at the time that this act of 1830 was enacted, which certainly contemplated that he did have authority over the Indians.

Mr. MANN. What provision is there in that act requiring it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly it would seem that an appropriation would be authorized under this act to investigate the condition of these Indians.

Mr. MANN. What provision is there in that act which gives the President any authority over the Seminole Indians?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Simply the implication that he did have authority over those Indians, and that authority was extended by this act of 1830 to these Indians who were removed west of the Mississippi River; it said that he was to have the authority that he had had before they were removed and conveyed clearly the idea that he did have authority over those Indians before they were removed.

Mr. MANN. There was a special act of Congress for the removal of those Seminole Indians from Florida to the western country. Most of them were removed under that act of Congress. Some of them preferred to remain in the Everglades, as they were entitled to. There was no authority granted to the President, as I recall history, in reference to the Seminole Indians remaining in the Everglades. There was a long contest between the State of Florida and those Indians extending over years, but there was no authority granted to the President in reference to supporting them or in reference to control over them whatever. They have lived without regard to the Government ever since the settlement of the war down there, when they were trying to keep us out of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. I understood the gentleman from South Dakota to say, in his opinion, the status of these Indians was that they might receive a direct appropriation now.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It is such, Mr. Chairman, that the President of the United States has authority to investigate the condition of these Indians; and if he has that authority, we have the authority now to appropriate money to enable him to do that. This is not an appropriation for the support of these Indians; it is simply an appropriation to authorize an investiagtion of their condition.

The CHAIRMAN. But it occurs to the Chair that the point of order must be sustained unless there can be shown that these particular Indians bear such a relationship to the Government as that we are charged with some supervision or guardianship over them. And if they are without that limitation, then we have no right to appropriate money in this bill for an examination of their condition than to examine the condition of white people in any county in the United States.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They are denominated Indians, and there is no question but they are Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman admit that there is any existing law or any existing treaty which imposes an obligation upon the Government to go to their assistance?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not any more than to the extent of ascertaining the condition of any Indians in the country. My position is that we have authority of law at the present time to make an appropriation by which the President or the Secretary of the Interior would be authorized to investigate and report to Congress, if you please, the condition of any tribe of Indians in the United States; any Indians.

Mr. MANN. These are not even a tribe.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It does not matter whether they are tribes or not.

Mr. MANN. They are individual Indians.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They are Indians; they are Seminole Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule, unless some one desires to be heard further.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say, further, that section 2071 contemplates that the President may authorize the support and instruction of Indians in agriculture, and so forth. In order to act intelligently he would have to get some information as to the condition of the Indians, and certainly we would have the power to make an appropriation to enable the President to ascertain the condition of a certain band of Indians and to ascertain whether or not he should extend that aid.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the section which was read a moment ago?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No, sir; that was another section. This is section 2071, authorizing capable persons to instruct the Indians in agriculture according to such instructions as the President may give and prescribe for the regulation of their conduct in the discharge of their duties. This authority is in the discretion of the President.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the meaning of the expression "of such Indians?" What Indians does that refer to?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Any Indians named.

The CHAIRMAN. Any Indians within the jurisdiction of the United States, not——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. These Indians are in Florida.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not mean within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, but those Indians that have relations with the United States. That is what I desired to learn.

Mr. MANN. I think the Chair and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] will find that all of those provisions of the Revised Statutes expressly refer to Indians in the Indian country. The term "Indian country" goes all through the statutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not in section 2071.

Mr. MANN. It says "such Indians." It refers to the legislation generally to Indians of the Indian country, which term has been frequently considered, and does not refer to Indians living in Florida, where there is no Indian country now. It certainly does not refer to Indians in Texas living upon land donated by the State of Texas.

Mr. CARTER. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Dakota a question.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to read section 2071 to the Chair. It is as follows:

SEC. 2071. The President may, in every case where he shall judge improvement in the habits and condition of such Indians practicable, and that the means of instruction can be introduced with their own consent, employ capable persons of good moral character to instruct them in the mode of agriculture suited to their situation; and for teaching their children in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and performing such other duties as may be enjoined, according to such instructions and rules as the President may give and prescribe for the regulation of their conduct in the discharge of their duties. A report of the proceedings adopted in the execution of this provision shall be annually laid before Congress.

Now, how is he going to get the information to enable him to act unless he makes some investigation? And if he is going to make an investigation, he has to have some appropriation to enable him to do so.

Mr. CARTER. I wanted to ask the gentleman from South Dakota a question, Mr. Chairman. By the treaty of 1830 the Seminoles were removed—that is, a part of them—from Florida to Oklahoma.

Now, by that treaty the Federal Government did not relinquish the supervision over these Indians who were removed to Oklahoma. Can the gentleman say whether there was a provision in that treaty that relinquished supervision over the Indians that remained in Florida?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not think there was; and even if there was, I do not think that would be a good reason for abandoning them at this time.

Mr. CARTER. If they did not relinquish them, then you have authority of law for the appropriation beyond all doubt, I think.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not think there is any doubt about it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the cutting of timber by Indians. It is as follows:

The President is authorized to grant to Indians temporary authority to fell, cut, remove, and sell, on reservations, or allotments fee to which remains in the United States, dead timber, standing or fallen, for their sole benefit. (Act Feb. 16, 1889 (25 Stat., 673), as construed by United States Supreme Court in Logging Co. v. U. S., 186 U. S., 279, 284.)

If the President has the right to do that, he certainly would have the right to investigate the condition of a tribe of Indians.

Mr. MANN. Well, I submit authority to do a hundred things does not furnish authority to investigate the condition of the Indians. If they are authorized to do certain things, an appropriation to do those things is in order. An appropriation to ascertain whether the Indians are in a condition to take advantage of an authority otherwise granted is not in order, and has no relation to the question.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have just one further authority. I call attention to the act of March 3, 1819:

That for the purpose of providing against the further decline and final extinction of the Indian tribes, adjoining the frontier settlements of the United States, and for introducing among them the habits and arts of civilization, the President of the United States shall be, and he is hereby, authorized, in every case where he shall judge improvement in the habits and condition of such Indians practicable and that the means of instruction can be introduced with their own consent, to employ capable persons of good moral character to instruct them in the mode of agriculture suited to their situation; and for teaching their children in reading, writing, and arithmetic and performing such other duties as may be enjoined, according to such instructions and rules as the President may give and prescribe for the regulation of their conduct in the discharge of their duties.

In the law which has already been cited it was provided further:

That the annual sum of $10,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act; and an account of the expenditures of the money and proceedings in execution of the foregoing provisions shall be laid annually before Congress.

Mr. MANN. What statute is that?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is the act of March 3, 1819.

Mr. MANN. That was repealed long ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that statute in effect?

Mr. MANN. It has been repealed long ago.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. But it was the basis of the present law and may be cited to give interpretation to it.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If the Chair will allow me for a moment, the Chair will notice on consulting the Revised Statutes, section 2071, which my colleague has referred to, that it refers to this act of March 3, 1819, as the basis of section 2071, and it is cited therefore by my colleague at this time to show to what Indians reference is made in section 2071. It is evidently a reference to the general Indian problem in the United States. Therefore, in section 2071, when "such Indians" are referred to as Indians that the President would become interested in and overlook and see after their well-being, it refers to the entire Indian tribes, as they were understood and known as far back as 1819. It was for that purpose that my colleague called the attention of the Chair to the fact that that act was the basis of section 2071.

Mr. MANN. It might be understood in citing the act of March, 1819, as referring to the section 2071, but "all acts of Congress passed prior to said 1st day of December, 1873, any portion of which is embraced in any section of said revision are hereby repealed." It most certainly does repeal it.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Any "such Indians" are very proper subjects of inquiry, and in the Revised Statutes this very act of March 3, 1819, is referred to as the basis of section 2071.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call the attention of the Chair to two sections which refer to the Indian tribes enumerated. Those sections are 2046 and 2052. Tribes are designated whose location are in different portions of the country; and it goes on further and says that the President, in connection with such Indians, can do so and so, and it can only refer to the tribes enumerated in the preceding sections, in both of which "such" is used. In section 2046, where provision is made for a superintendent, and in section 2052, where provision is made for agents, reference is made to various tribes. The word "such" must relate back to those tribes which are named in the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

A question almost identical with this one was presented to the House in the Fifty-sixth Congress, when an amendment to this effect was offered to the Indian appropriation bill:

For the support and civilization of the Shebits, Muddy, and other Indians in southern Utah, $2,500.

A Member of the House by the name of JOSEPH G. CANNON raised the point of order, and the Chairman, in deciding it, cited Rule XXI, which the committee all know:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

The question here, then, is whether the support for these Indians has heretofore been authorized by law. The Chair thinks that there is much in the point the gentleman from New York has just stated in reference to the meaning of those sections 2046 and 2052.

They seemed to indicate the Indians over whom the Government was to exercise some supervisory and helpful authority; and the further reference to the subject under section 2071, the Chair thinks, is limited by the provisions of those two sections. The Chair has not had his attention called to any existing law authorizing the extension of aid to these particular Indians named in the section, and therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the twelfth to the twentieth, inclusive, of the treaty installments, as provided in the agreement with the Indians of the Fort Hall and Lemhi agencies, Idaho, approved February 23, 1889, to be used for the benefit of the Indians removed to Fort Hall Reservation from Lemhi Agency, Idaho, in such manner as the President may direct, $36,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of finding out whether the word "treaty," in line 3, was intentionally used, or whether it should be "twenty." The wording heretofore has been "of the 20 installments."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It should be twenty, and I ask unanimous consent that the word "treaty," in that line, be changed to "twenty."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the Chair would recognize me to make a motion that the committee do now rise, but I can raise the point of no quorum.

Mr. MANN. Let it run a little bit longer.

Mr. CLAYTON. It is twenty minutes after 5. How long does the gentleman wish to continue?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Just a few minutes, until 5.45.

Mr. CLAYTON. I will renew the point of no quorum at half after 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum is withdrawn.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the portion of the bill beginning with line 24, on page 13, down to and including line 8, on page 15, be passed without prejudice, for the reason that I have a provision to offer at the end of the bill which proposes to capitalize these obligations and dispose of them; and if that be adopted, then this should go out of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that beginning with line 24, on page 13, to and including line 8, on page 15, be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk, continuing the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 11. For the support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Genoa, Nebr., $50,400; for payment of superintendent, $1,700; for general repairs and improvements, $1,000; in all, $53,100.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I remained here until a quarter after 5 on Saturday, and then you had a roll call. Now it is half after 5, and I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MANN. Let the Clerk read to the end of the section.

Mr. CLAYTON. I can not consent to that. I move that the committee do now rise, or I will raise the point of no quorum. You can have it either way.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the committee do now rise.

The question being taken, on a division there were—ayes 14, noes 28.

So the motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. For support and civilization of the Indians of the Western Shoshone Agency, Nev., including pay of employees, $8,000.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 19028) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills and joint resolutions:

H. R. 2828. An act for the relief of William Martinson;

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 22, 1910.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, the God of our fathers, we render unto Thee glory, honor, and praise for Thy gracious providence which brings us to this day of grateful and holy remembrance. We invoke Thy blessing, our Father, upon this Nation, which Thou hast created for Thy glory and guided by Thy counsel. Knit us together, we pray Thee, in the bonds of peace and of righteousness, delivering us from violence without and from discord within. Defend us in our liberties and establish us in Thy fear, that by the continuance of Thy favor this Nation may indeed be that happy people whose God is the Lord. And so as Thou wast with our fathers be Thou, we pray Thee, with their sons, and with our children; now and forever more. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. CULLOM, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In furtherance of the mandate of the Senate as evidenced by its resolution of January 24, 1901, Washington's Farewell Address will now be read to the Senate, the Chair already having designated the senior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] for that duty and honor.

Mr. DEPEW read the address, as follows:

To the people of the United States:

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed to decline being considered among the number of those out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you at the same time to do me the justice to be assured that this resolution has not been taken without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that in withdrawing the tender of service, which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest, no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness, but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this previous to the last election had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence impelled me to abandon the idea. I rejoice that the state of your concerns, external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety, and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed toward the organization and administration of the Government the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and every day the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is intended to terminate the career of my political life my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me, and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise and as an instructive example in our annals that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead; amidst appearances sometimes dubious; vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging; in situations in which not unfrequently want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism, the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts and a guaranty of the plans by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence; that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual; that the free Constitution which is the work of your hands may be sacredly maintained; that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue; that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these States, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection, and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare, which can not end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger natural to that solicitude, urge me on an occasion like the present to offer to your solemn contemplation and to recommend to your frequent review some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all-important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget as an encouragement to it your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people is also now dear to you. It is justly so, for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence, the support of your tranquillity at home, your peace abroad, of your safety, of your prosperity, of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee that from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth, as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively, though often covertly and insidiously, directed, it is of infinite moment that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it, accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned, and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth or choice of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have in a common cause fought and triumphed together. The independence and liberty you possess are the work of joint counsels and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings, and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest. Here every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The North, in an unrestrained intercourse with the South, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise and precious materials of manufacturing industry. The South, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the North, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the North, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes in different ways to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength to which itself is unequally adapted. The East, in a like intercourse with the West, already finds, and in the progressive improvements of interior communications by land and water will more and more find, a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad or manufactures at home. The West derives from the East supplies requisite to its growth and comfort, and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one Nation. Any other tenure by which the West can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While, then, every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined can not fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations, and what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same governments, which their own rivalships alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues would stimulate and embitter. Hence, likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments which, under any form of government, are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the Union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? Let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who in any quarter may endeavor to weaken its bands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our union, it occurs as matter of serious concern that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations—northern and southern, Atlantic and western—whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You can not shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heartburnings which spring from these misrepresentations; they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head. They have seen in the negotiation by the Executive and in the unanimous ratification by the Senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at that event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the General Government and in the Atlantic States unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties—that with Great Britain and that with Spain—which secure to them everything they could desire in respect to our foreign relations toward confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? Will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such there are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your union a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute. They must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances in all times have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay by the adoption of a constitution of government better calculated than your former for an intimate union and for the efficacious management of your common concerts. This government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government. But the constitution which at any time exists, till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction; to give it an artificial and extraordinary force; to put in the place of the delegated will of the Nation the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community, and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of faction rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans, digested by common councils and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely in the course of time and things to become potent engines by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people and to usurp for themselves the reins of government, destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Toward the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state it is requisite not only that you steadily discountenance irregular oppositions to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretexts. One method of assault may be to effect in the forms of the Constitution alterations which may impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what can not be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments as other human institutions; that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country; that facility in changes upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion exposes to perpetual change, from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion; and remember especially that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular reference to the founding of them on geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

The spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual, and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight), the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foments occasionally riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which find a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passion. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true, and in governments of a monarchical cast patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose, and there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be by force of public opinion to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming it should consume.

It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominates in the human heart is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into the different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions by the others, has been evinced by experiments, ancient and modern, some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If in the opinion of the people the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principles.

It is substantially true that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule, indeed, extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric? Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace; but remembering also that timely disbursements to prepare for danger frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions in time of peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burthen which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives; but it is necessary that public opinion should cooperate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty it is essential that you should practically bear in mind that toward the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper objects (which is always a choice of difficulties) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the Government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct. And can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and at no distant period a great nation to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt that in the course of time and things the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it? Can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others should be excluded, and that in place of them just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges toward another an habitual hatred or an habitual fondness is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur.

Hence frequent collisions; obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation prompted by ill will and resentment sometimes impels to war the government contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject. At other times it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty, of nations has been the victim.

So, likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter without adequate inducement or justification. It leads also to concessions to the favorite nation of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens (who devote themselves to the favorite nation) facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country without odium, sometimes even with popularity, gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation a commendable deference of public opinion or a laudable zeal for public good the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils! Such an attachment of a small or weak toward a great and powerful nation dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter. Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow-citizens) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike of another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots who may resist the intrigues of the favorites are liable to become suspected and odious, while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not legally hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war, as our interests, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world, so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than to private affairs that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But, in my opinion, it is unnecessary and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, liberal intercourse with all nations are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand, neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the Government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish—that they will control the usual current of the passions or prevent our Nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations. But if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good—that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism—this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far in the discharge of my official duties I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is that I have at least believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice and by that of your Representatives in both Houses of Congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take and was bound in duty and interest to take a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance, and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity toward other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress without interruption to that degree of strength and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanely speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my administration I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence, and that, after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love toward it which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations, I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize without alloy the sweet enjoyment of partaking in the midst of my fellow-citizens the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever-favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors, and dangers.

GO: WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, September 17, 1796.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. DU PONT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $300,000 for improving the inland waterway from Chincoteague Bay, Virginia, to Delaware Bay, Delaware, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000,000 for continuing the improvement of the Anacostia River and the reclamation and improvement of its flats, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BURKETT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $250,000 to protect from the waters of the Missouri River property represented by the financial, commercial, and municipal interests of Omaha, South Omaha, Florence, and Dundee, in the territory of Florence, Nebr., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAY submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for improving the Coosa River, Georgia, to $125,000, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FOSTER submitted an amendment relative to the improvement of the waterway between Jefferson, Tex., and Shreveport, La., by the construction of a lock and dam, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

FEDERAL AND STATE MILITARY ORGANIZATIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I present a paper prepared by the Committee on Pensions of the United States Senate, being a history of certain federal troops which, by reason of short or disputed services, have no pensionable status, and state militias which were actively engaged in the civil war for different periods of time, but which were never mustered into the service, and which, therefore, have no pensionable status. I move that the paper be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed, and the calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) to continue in full force and effect an act entitled "An act to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the confederate army and navy who died in northern prisons and were buried near the prisons where they died, and for other purposes," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 2, line 2, after the word "effect," to strike out "for one year from this date" and insert "until the 31st day of December, 1910;" and on the same page, line 5, after the name "Chicago," to strike out "Provided further, That the Secretary of War may cause to be erected at the head of each grave of a citizen or civilian prisoner of war who was buried among the soldiers a headstone of the size and dimensions of those placed at the head of the soldiers' graves, but containing no inscription except the number of the grave, the name of the occupant, and the word 'citizen' or 'civilian' placed thereon, and at an expense for each no greater than that for each soldier," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the confederate army and navy who died in northern prisons and were buried near the prisons where they died, and for other purposes," approved March 9, 1906, and continued in full force and effect for two years by a joint resolution approved February 26, 1908, be, and the same is hereby, continued in full force and effect until the 31st day of December, 1910: Provided, That said act shall not be construed to apply to the Confederate Mound in Oakwood Cemetery at Chicago: And provided further, That the compensation of the commissioner shall be fixed by the Secretary of War.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLOSING OF FORTY-FIRST STREET NW., DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 5252) to authorize the closing of a part of Forty-first street NW., in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to vacate and abandon Forty-first street NW. between Warren and Yuma streets, and upon its abandonment it shall revert to the property abutting thereon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT BUILDING LINES AND RESTRICTIONS.

The bill (S. 5715) providing for the establishment of building lines and special building restrictions in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let that bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

SALE OF POISONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 3254) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved May 7, 1906, by prohibiting the sale of poisonous hair dressing, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] kindly explain the purpose of that bill and the evils it is intended to eradicate?

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the report be read. It will explain the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it will be only necessary to read the letter from the commissioners.

Mr. CARTER. I waive the reading of the report, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana withdraws his request for the reading of the report.

Mr. GALLINGER. If it is not desired, I will withdraw the request that the letter to which I referred be read.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, on page 2, line 4, after the word "skin," to strike out "as a whole or through any component part or parts of said substance;" and in line 9, after the word "business," to insert "Provided, That nothing in this paragraph contained shall be construed to prevent the sale, delivery, or use of any substance aforesaid when duly prescribed in writing by a lawfully practicing physician," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 13 of the act of May 7, 1906, entitled "An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding after the first paragraph of said section another paragraph, to read as follows:

"No person shall sell or deliver to any other person any substance for shampooing or cleansing the hair or skin which is liable by inhalation or by absorption through the skin to produce poisonous effects, and the use of any substance which contains carbon tetrachloride, gasolene, benzene or benzole, or benzine is hereby forbidden. No person engaged in the business of hair dressing or shampooing shall use any such substance in said business: Provided, That nothing in this paragraph contained shall be construed to prevent the sale, delivery, or use of any substance aforesaid when duly prescribed in writing by a lawfully practicing physician."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF JULIUS JACOBS.

The bill (S. 646) for the relief of the estate of Julius Jacobs was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $2,000 to the estate of the late Julius Jacobs, that being the amount of money paid by the estate to the Treasurer of the United States in satisfaction of the loss of an equal sum taken by parties unknown from the vaults of the subtreasury of the United States in the city of San Francisco, Cal., while they were under guard of United States troops during and after the fire which followed the earthquake of April 18, 1906.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS-METHODS COMMISSION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I submit an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 6168) creating a government business-methods commission, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. NEWLANDS as a substitute to the bill (S. 6168) creating a government business methods commission, viz: Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That a commission is hereby created, to be called the 'Government Business Methods Commission,' to be composed of not exceeding nine members, to be appointed by the President of the United States; and any vacancy on the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. Such commission may be composed of such employees of the executive department and such experts in business methods and administration as the President may designate. The President is authorized to fix the compensation of such experts or administrators, but the employees of the executive department so appointed shall receive no extra compensation, except for such incidental expense as they may be put to by reason of their duties on such commission. The total expenditures under this act, both for contingent expense and for salaries, until further authorized by law, shall not exceed $50,000.

"SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of such commission to inquire into and report to the President at the earliest date or dates practicable what changes are necessary or desirable in the methods of transacting the business of the Government or in the laws relating thereto, and for this purpose they are authorized to sit at such times and places as they may deem desirable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ such secretaries, experts, stenographers, messengers, and other assistants as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes for which said commission was created. The commission shall have the power, through subcommittee or otherwise, to examine witnesses and to make such investigations and examinations of the subjects committed to their charge as they shall deem necessary. The President is authorized to carry out such recommendations of said commission as he may approve and as are not inconsistent with existing law, and wherever changes in the existing law are necessary for such purpose he shall report the same to Congress.

"SEC. 3. That the President is also authorized to bring into coordination and cooperation the departments, bureaus, and services of the executive department of the United States, with a view to preventing duplication of work, improving business methods, and uniting the experience and information of the various departments, bureaus, and services in matters of construction and administration, and to appoint such boards and committees in connection therewith as he may deem advisable."

MARKING OF GRAVES OF CONFEDERATES.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I move to reconsider the votes by which the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) to continue in full force and effect an act entitled "An act to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the confederate army and navy who died in northern prisons and were buried where they died, and for other purposes," was ordered to a third reading, and passed by the Senate this morning.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I move that the joint resolution be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate House joint resolution No. 137, received this day from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 137) to continue in full force and effect an act entitled "An act to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the confederate army and navy who died in northern prisons and were buried near the prisons where they died, and for other purposes," was read twice by its title.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by M. C. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 21st instant, approved and signed (S. 5574) an act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

H. R. 13899. An act granting unto the Hot Springs Street Railway Company, its successors and assigns, the right to maintain and operate its electric railway along the southern border of that portion of the Hot Springs Reservation, in the State of Arkansas, known as the Whittington Lake Reserve Park;

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 22, 1910.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we lift up our hearts in gratitude to Thee that Thou hast not left us to grope in darkness, but that Thou art imminent, working in and through the minds and hearts of Thy children to larger life and nobler achievements; that from time to time great souls are raised up, who, susceptible to the heavenly influences, fulfill their mission and then pass on, leaving the world better that they lived and wrought. Such a soul was our beloved Washington, "the Father of his Country."

Broad in his conceptions, firm in his convictions, unswerving in his fidelity to truth and justice, a soldier, a statesman, a Christian. The impress of his intellect, the love of his great heart, the touch of his skillful hand are everywhere apparent throughout the length and breadth of our land. The site of this city "beautiful" bears his name, and the Capitol under whose majestic Dome we gather were chosen by him. The principles which he fathered live in the hearts of the people and are upheld and sustained by their representatives in the Halls of Congress. The flag which represents the sacred institutions he loved, of his design, cherished by every American citizen because he carried it to victory and made possible those institutions, and which flag, thank God, still floats in triumph "o'er land and o'er sea."

And grant, O most merciful Father, that his life and character may be an inspiration to untold generations that our Republic may live on and on and on. For thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the reference of the bill (H. R. 11194) to acquire certain land in Cecelia M. Coughlin and others' subdivision of Pretty Prospect and Cliffbourne, in the District of Columbia, for a public park, was changed from the Committee on the District of Columbia to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 19028, the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to recur to page 11 of the bill, simply to change the phraseology of the proviso which was offered as an amendment to an amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN]. On page 2190 of the RECORD will appear the amendment, and I offer the following.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to recur to page 11 for the purpose of offering an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Change the second proviso adopted as an amendment to an amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado, which is printed on page 2190 of the RECORD, so as to read as follows:

"Provided further, That if such property is not accepted by the State of Colorado as hereinbefore provided, or if the State of Colorado does not accept the Fort Lewis Indian schools as provided in the act approved March 3, 1909, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to dispose of and convey the real estate, including the buildings and fixtures of either of the said schools, to the highest bidder."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of Indians located on the Piute, Walker River, and Pyramid Lake reservations, in the State of Nevada, $4,500; for pay of employees, including physician at the Walker River Reservation, $4,000; in all, $8,500.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 19, line 24, strike out the word "Piute" and insert the words "Moapa River."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the board of county commissioners of Ormsby County, Nev., in full settlement for damages to the public road caused by the breaking of the dam belonging to the Indian school at Carson City, Nev., the sum of $70, to be paid from an unexpended balance of the appropriation "Indian school, Carson City, Nev., 1907."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Dakota whether this is the same old claim that has been thrown out several times? If it is, I am inclined to let it stay in because if it is the same claim of $70 reported for so many years it has already cost the Government for printing the bill more than the amount claimed; but I would like to suggest that possibly there is no balance of appropriation for Carson City Indian School, 1907. I am inclined to think that that has been covered back into the Treasury under the act of Congress.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to state whether there is an unexpended balance, but this amendment was suggested by the department in their estimate. They also say, and I agree with what the gentleman from Illinois says, that this small amount of $70 ought to be paid. The state and the local authorities seem to feel that the Government really caused the damage and that it ought to pay this sum. The committee felt that we ought to report it, and so we put it in the bill. It is the only thing in the bill that is in the nature of a claim, as I recollect.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one special attorney for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, $1,500; for necessary traveling and incidental expenses of said attorney, $500; in all, $2,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the paragraph just read. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what is the purpose of this appropriation to pay attorney fees?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, it is necessary to employ legal services for these Indians to put them in peaceable possession of their real property. Suit has been pending for six years involving the question of title to some 25,000 acres of land to which the Indians claim title. The ablest attorneys in Santa Fe have been retained by the plaintiffs in this action, and it is absolutely necessary that the Indians have an attorney to protect their rights. Other suits are pending in the territorial courts affecting the title to land and water rights. It appeared to the committee at first that perhaps this work ought to be performed by the United States district attorney, but we found it involved suits in state courts affecting the properties of the Indians, and that it was probably work the United States district attorney would not be required to perform. This litigation has been in the courts for several years, and special counsel has been employed, and the committee thought it would be better to continue this appropriation in order that the same attorneys might be continued to the termination of the litigation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is the gentleman of opinion that the Department of Justice has no jurisdiction in this class of litigation?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not say that, Mr. Chairman, but I think there are cases pending about which it is doubtful whether the Department of Justice would have jurisdiction.

Mr. COX of Indiana. This money now that the gentleman is seeking to appropriate is not Indian money, is it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It is not.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Well, has the Government indulged in the practice heretofore of employing attorneys for the Indians?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think they have in special instances.

Mr. COX of Indiana. There is no general statute that empowers the employment of attorneys for that purpose?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think not. I am not aware of it if there is. There may be. I am inclined to think that there must be such a statute, because it is a very common practice for special counsel to be retained in government cases.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Why do these Indians have to have protection? Why do they not employ their own attorney?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Because they are not able to do so.

Mr. ADAIR. Has a similar appropriation been carried in the Indian bill in prior years?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. For the last five or six years this appropriation has been continued. It is not a new departure.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How much was it in the last appropriation bill?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The same as this year.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman feel that this is going to go on indefinitely?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think not.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Has the gentleman any assurance that this will end it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have no assurance other than that we know that in time litigation does terminate, but you can not tell just when.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the Government has no jurisdiction to order the regular district attorney to take care of this litigation, what authority has it to employ special counsel?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As the guardian of the Indians, it certainly would be its duty if an Indian allottee was to be dispossessed of his allotment or any other property—it would be the duty of the Government to protect the Indian by the employment of attorneys.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then, as guardian for these Indians, would it not be a very proper thing for the Government to order the regular district attorney to take care of this litigation?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Well, we considered that, and upon careful consideration we concluded we ought not to do that. I do not think it would be the duty of the United States district attorney to perform this service.

Mr. MANN. Of course, we could require it by law.

Mr. HAMLIN. Is it not his duty to take care of such litigation as the Government orders him to take care of?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. We could undoubtedly by law define his duties so that he would be required to attend to this class of litigation.

Mr. HAMLIN. Would it not be less expense to the Government, then, if there is no law authorizing it now, to authorize the district attorney to take care of this litigation?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There has been no such amount paid out, Mr. Chairman, as to make it necessary, I think, to change the existing law so far as it applies to the duties of the United States district attorney.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Who has fixed this fee at $1,500?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I presume the Interior Department.

Mr. COX of Indiana. That is to say, the chairman of the committee gets the information from the Interior Department?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. From the department.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman, with the permission of the gentleman from South Dakota, that these Indian tribes are Pueblo Indians, who live on the Rio Grande River and who were there when the Spaniards first came into that country. The boundaries of their lands around the Pueblos have never been well defined. The Mexicans own the land all around them and have been there also for two or three hundred years. Before that country became a part of the United States it was a part, first, of Spain, then of Mexico; and the land titles in that country are therefore derived from Spain and Mexico and were granted under their laws. They had maps and some kind of records, but the evidence of title and boundaries is usually incomplete. Hence, it is very hard for a man not skilled in the Spanish laws and in the old Spanish and Mexican or Indian titles to understand anything about this litigation. But there are lawyers in New Mexico who have made these laws a lifetime study, and are therefore capable of defending suits relative to these titles. It is very difficult to understand these boundaries, titles, and Spanish grants, and the special attorney employed by the Interior Department is well informed on these questions. The district attorneys who are appointed out there in New Mexico usually come from some other State, usually from common-law States, and they do not know anything about these Mexican land titles or these old Spanish land grants or of the Indian land titles or their rights or of their relation to the Spanish and Mexican Governments. Hence it is important for the department to have some attorney in that country who understands the laws of the land in connection with the tribal Indian rights thereto.

Mr. MANN. Is this attorney now employed?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. He is now employed, as I understand the matter, and some litigation is now pending over the rights of certain of these Indian lands.

Mr. MANN. If this appropriation were not made the United States attorney would have to take care of them, which would involve a loss of what this attorney now knows.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly; and it would be like changing a horse in the middle of a stream. In the condition of this litigation the attorneys now in charge of it certainly ought to be allowed to continue in the cases until the litigation is ended.

Mr. GOULDEN. Is there any other reservation affected?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The one I have in mind is the one near and above Albuquerque a few miles. These Indians have been on this reservation time out of mind.

Mr. GOULDEN. Is there no other reservation affected in the same way?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. None that I know of, but other Pueblo are likely to have suits brought against them in the same way.

Mr. COX of Indiana. There is no question but what the Government has control over these Indians?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; they are wards of the Government, and they can not make contracts which bind them.

Mr. COX of Indiana. As I gathered from the gentleman's statement, he does not place the necessity for this appropriation upon the ground that the judiciary or the Attorney-General's Department have no jurisdiction to look after this matter?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; but it is not good policy to employ a lawyer who knows nothing about the conduct of such litigation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. But he puts it on the ground that the United States attorney who is in that country may not be competent to handle these cases.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I put it on the ground that he would not be as familiar with the land laws of New Mexico and the rights of the Indians thereto as the attorney now conducting the case for the Indians.

Mr. COX of Indiana. As I understand, in the gentleman's opinion, the Department of Justice would have control over this kind of litigation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This act gives the Indian Bureau specific charge of it and direction to proceed with the litigation now pending, and this department now has, I learn, a competent attorney in charge of the case for the Indians.

Mr. COX of Indiana. He is a local attorney?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As I understand, he lives in Santa Fe.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Now, can the gentleman say how much of this appropriation of this attorney is used in traveling expenses and how much for the work? Has the gentleman that information?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That matter is under the control of the Secretary of the Interior and is ascertained from reports made by some special Indian agents they have in that country. Under the Indian Department they have inspectors and agents who are sent over the country looking after the interests of the Indians, and we must look to them for the information we get.

This outside knowledge I have been giving you is from personal observation, as I am frequently in that country and know something of the surroundings there and of the laws and condition of the country.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, from the information gathered it is very apparent to me that there is no law in force authorizing this appropriation; and as the Department of Justice, in my judgment, is abundantly able to look after this matter, I think I shall insist on the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order. These Indians are certainly in need of the services of an attorney. An attorney has been employed there for several years, and not to make an appropriation to continue his services, he may refuse to serve or he will go on and serve, and we will take the matter up here again and will ultimately have the bill to pay. It seems to me the amount is so reasonable, $1,500, and only $500 to cover expenses in the course of a year, that I hope my friend from Illinois and my friend from Indiana will not make the point of order.

Mr. COX of Indiana. In response, Mr. Chairman, to what the gentleman has said, it is not so much the $1,500 that is involved, but it is the principle. The Government is abundantly provided with attorneys who are able, in my judgment, to handle this matter, and Congress is constantly and continuously asked to appropriate and to reappropriate money for special attorneys in special cases, to all of which I am opposed.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not think my friend means to put his judgment against the judgment of the committee that has considered this subject. It was the unanimous opinion of the committee that this employment should be continued. While I have great respect for the gentleman's judgment, I think that he is mistaken when he says this ought not to be allowed.

Mr. COX of Indiana. In response I will say that I am not putting my judgment against the judgment of the committee that prepared this bill, but I have my own individual opinion about this matter, and I feel that I am entitled to assert it.

Mr. GOULDEN. How long has this attorney been employed?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Five or six years. I have a little more information I would like to give to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox]. It says:

Suit has been pending for nearly six years involving the title to some 25,000 acres of the land to which the Indians claim title. About 16,000 acres of this land, if irrigated, is estimated to be worth $50 per acre. All the ablest attorneys in Santa Fe have been retained by the plaintiff in this action, and it is absolutely necessary for the Indians to have an attorney to protect their rights.

In a report of October 21, 1909 (84837-09), the special attorney for the Pueblo Indians gave the status of six land suits pending in the territorial courts, one of which was instituted as far back as 1902, one land-contest case before the General Land Office, and a controversy over the water rights of the Taos Pueblo pending before the territorial engineer. These matters are being contested at every step by interests adverse to the Indians, but are being expedited as much as the circumstances will permit by the representatives of the Government. The successful prosecution of these cases is very necessary for the welfare of the Pueblo Indians.

Now, you will see that this involves land contests and the question of water rights, and it does seem to me that, in view of the fact that under no circumstances would an United States district attorney be required to appear and defend the rights of these Indians, and in view of the fact that this employment has already been continued for five or six years, we ought not at this time to say that we will not make an appropriation to continue the employment of these attorneys.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Who is this attorney?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am sure I do not know his name.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Has the gentleman asked the Secretary of the Interior for his name?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have not, but I will be very glad to get the information for the gentleman and furnish it to him a little later, if it is important whether his name is Brown, Smith, or Jones. I did not think it was important.

Mr. ADAIR. I understand from the statement of the gentleman—the chairman of the committee—that these cases are matters of very great importance, indeed, and are being very hotly contested, especially on the other side, and require the attention of an attorney of ability and standing. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] has stated that it requires a man especially familiar with certain features, and so forth. What I want to ask the gentleman is whether or not an attorney can be employed at the rate of $1,500 a year that possesses the necessary qualifications and ability to look after the interests of these Indians?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Why, Mr. Chairman, in answer to that proposition, it never occurred to me, and I do not think to any member of the commitee, that this attorney is giving his entire time to looking after the business of these Indians. I assume that he does this in the regular course of his practice, and that he has other clients besides these Indians.

Mr. ADAIR. Well, I trust he has. I am not in favor of taking this out of the bill, but it occurred to me if he was a $1,500 per annum man that he was scarcely competent to take care of that business.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman is entirely right in his conclusion. I hope the gentleman will not press the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the item is subject to the point of order. If the United States district attorney could do this, then it would be in order to make an appropriation for special assistant counsel to the United States district attorney under the sundry civil appropriation bill.

If we have authority on the part of the Government to defend these pending suits at all, then there must be an authority to make an appropriation for the payment of counsel other than district attorney or special counsel in the case. We have authority in the sundry civil appropriation bill to add an appropriation for additional district attorneys, assistants to district attorneys, and additional assistance in the Attorney-General's office now without question. If we have that authority, it seems to me we could make that appropriation in this bill. It is true this is a special attorney. Has the Government authority to defend the suit? Is it not the duty of the United States attorney, under the law as fixed, so far as the statute prescribing his duties is concerned, to defend these private suits? Have we the authority to defend the suits? It seems to me that as long as the General Government is exercising control over this particular tribe of Indians it is possible to make an appropriation and is authorized to make an appropriation for their support. We have authority to defend suits brought against them to take away their property.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. In just a moment. If we have authority to defend the suits, and we have already entered upon the work of defending the suits, have we authority to pay the counsel whom we have engaged in the case? Here are a number of lawsuits pending. We have employed counsel in those cases. We have the authority to defend the suits. It is the duty of the Government to defend the suits and to employ counsel. Now, have we the authority to pay the counsel? Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Do I understand the gentleman to contend that this is the law as it exists—that the United States attorney would have no jurisdiction to defend these suits? I gather that from the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MANN. I contend that the law creating the district attorney does not compel him to defend the suit. The Government is not a party to the suit. I would say they would have authority, if they so choose, not to defend the suits, but I think it is quite plain that Congress would have authority to appropriate additional money to the Attorney-General's office by which he might employ special counsel for the defense of the suit. It seems to me that the question is whether we have the authority to defend the suit and pay for them out of the General Treasury. These Indians are under our control; they are on a reservation under our control. The title to the property which they claim is in dispute. It is our duty to protect the title to their property; and if it is our duty to protect the title to their property when suit is brought against them for the title of their property, it seems to me that we have authority to employ counsel. It is possible that the word "special" or "special attorney" would be subject to the point of order. However, I hardly think so; but to pay for counsel in this litigation is not subject, I think, to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist upon his point of order?

Mr. COX of Indiana. I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It appears that these Indians live in the Indian country; they are within the class of Indians concerning which the statutes which have been read during the discussion of this bill refer to as placed within the care of the President of the United States and the Indian Bureau. They are living, as stated, in that Indian country upon a reservation. It seems that under a fair construction of the several statutes which have been cited—and it is not necessary to consume time to refer to them again at length—the Government has the authority to employ counsel to defend the rights of those Indians where they are attacked. The gentleman from Indiana conceded as much as that when he argued that the United States attorney ought to take charge of this matter. If there is authority for the employment, there is sufficient authority of law to support an appropriation to cover the expense.

It seems to the Chair, without further elaboration, that the point of order must be overruled.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fulfilling treaties with Six Nations of New York: For permanent annuity, in clothing and other useful articles (Art. VI, treaty of Nov. 11, 1794), $4,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask that lines 7 to 10, inclusive, on page 21, be passed without prejudice, for the purpose of returning to them for amendment, if we can agree upon an amendment that I shall subsequently offer to capitalize these funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the lines 7 to 10, on page 21, be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 325 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Fort Totten, N. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $55,975; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; in all, $60,975.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, line 5, after the semicolon following the word "dollars," insert the following: "For heating and lighting system, $4,000."

In the same line strike out the word "sixty" and insert in lieu thereof "sixty-four," so that it will read: "For general repairs and improvements, $5,000; for heating and lighting system, $4,000; in all, $64,975."

Mr. HANNA. The reason I offer that amendment is that the school at Fort Totten is a large Indian school and is conducted in a frame building. It is heated by 29 stoves and lighted entirely by kerosene lamps. They want to put in a heating and lighting plant for the safety of the pupils who attend the school. Their ages run from 6 to 18 years. The cost of heating and lighting is about $1,800 per year at present. Both on the score of economy and for humanitarian reasons it would seem to be advisable to provide this school with an up-to-date heating plant and a lighting system.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the Sisseton and Wahpeton and Cut Head bands of Sioux Indians of the Devils Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of North Dakota, for a tract of land containing 960 acres, formerly embraced within the Devils Lake Indian Reservation, known as "Sully's Hill," which tract was reserved from disposition by proclamation of the President dated June 2, 1908, made in pursuance of the act of Congress approved April 27, 1904, ratifying and amending the agreement with said Indians for the cession of certain of their lands, at the rate of $3.25 per acre, $3,120.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee whether in the agreement with the Indians the price per acre has been fixed?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There was an agreement with these Indians by which they were to be paid this price for the land disposed of, but this tract was reserved and there was no disposition made of it. The lands that were retained for agency and school purposes were bought from the Indians at the rate of $3.25 an acre.

Mr. MANN. In the agreement that was ratified was the price fixed at $3.25 an acre for this land?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. For all the land that was to be disposed of.

Mr. MANN. I mean for all the land, including this land.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. For support and civilization of the Wichitas and affiliated bands who have been collected on the reservations set apart for their use and occupation in Oklahoma, $5,000.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I notice that in last year's appropriation bill, and I think for a number of years, this item has been $25,000.

Mr. MANN. Including the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; including the Kiowas, Comanches, and Apaches. A short time ago the Indians were here, and were complaining regarding that provision. They went on to say that this money had been used heretofore for the maintenance of the agency, and they felt that it ought still to be in the bill, so that the funds would not have to come out of their own pockets. I would like to hear what the chairman of the committee has to say.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It was the unanimous opinion of the committee that just as rapidly as we can do so we will recommend the elimination of appropriations where the Indians are as prosperous as some of the tribes are at the present time, for whose care and support appropriations have been made heretofore. It appears that this item, as stated by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] has been $25,000, and in addition to these Wichitas and affiliated bands there were included the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians. It appearing that they had a large sum of money in the Treasury, and that they were getting receipts from rentals and other things, we did not feel that we ought to recommend the appropriation of any money that would be used for their care and support. We brought the matter to the attention of the department, and after they investigated it and considered it carefully they suggested to us that the appropriation could be reduced to $5,000, and that would be entirely sufficient to take care of the Wichitas and affiliated bands that are without any means, and we would therefore make no appropriation for the prosperous and well-to-do Indians named in the prior acts.

Mr. FERRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman a further question. Has the same economy been practiced with other Indians? I do not ask these questions in any spirit of criticism.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say that it has to a greater extent than this in a few instances, and we hope at the next session that we can practice it very much more generally than we have in this bill. These Indians that I have referred to, for whom provision was made heretofore, have in the Treasury of the United States $3,500,000.

Mr. FERRIS. As I understand, the gentleman expects to pursue this policy hereafter?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Wherever it is possible to do so without violating any treaty obligations.

Mr. FERRIS. With that statement, I have no objection to the reduction.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes of Indians in Oklahoma and pay out the same for the benefit of the members of said tribes, including their maintenance and support and improvement of their homesteads, for the ensuing year in such manner and under such regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. MANN. To that paragraph, Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As I have already stated, these Indians have in the Treasury to their credit $3,500,000. They have made application that they be permitted to withdraw from their own fund this amount of money, and inasmuch as we took away the appropriation that had heretofore been expended for their support and care, we concluded it would be the proper thing to allow them to withdraw from their own funds the sum of $250,000, it being so safeguarded that it will only be expended for their material benefit and best interest.

Mr. MANN. Of course this is withdrawing a part of their principal. They now, I suppose, draw the interest for their annual care?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am not clear as to this particular item, but I think they do draw the interest, and I am quite certain that this fund is being added to all the time by the proceeds from the sale of land.

Mr. MANN. The reason I ask is that I notice the provision authorizes the withdrawal of $250,000 of the principal, to be used partly for improvements for the homestead—that would be for improvements—and partly for their maintenance and support.

I would like to know what the policy of the committee is as to withdrawing the principal of the sum now to the credit of the Indians for their support. If they are unable to live on the interest and spend the principal for support, how long will it be before the principal is exhausted and we are called upon to furnish money in lieu of both principal and interest for their support?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say, as I have said heretofore, that we appropriated $20,000 for the care and support of the Indians, and that money was used only to take care of the poor and helpless Indians. The purpose here is to permit that to be done at their own expense. Speaking only for myself, I think it would be an improvement in their condition if these trust funds could be kept down, instead of being built up into such large sums as are accumulating to the credit of some of the Indians in this country. I do not think they will ever make the progress they would otherwise make if we build up large funds in the Treasury to their credit, which gives them to understand that they need not be concerned about any great expense, that they have a large fund to take care of them and provide against want.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GOULDEN. What is the amount of money in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians in the United States?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The trust funds amounted to about $46,000,000 on the 30th of last June, and I think fourteen or fifteen million of other moneys belonging to the Indians is in the Treasury, making the amount somewhere about $60,000,000.

Mr. GOULDEN. Does the money bear interest?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. A large part of it bears interest; we are paying out annually about $2,000,000 a year as interest on these trust funds.

Mr. GOULDEN. At what rate of interest?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. From 3 to 5 per cent; the larger part of it at 5 per cent.

Mr. GOULDEN. What is intended to be done with the money ultimately?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is one of the problems that will have to be solved in the future. The present policy is to retain in the Treasury the trust funds that will protect the tribes from want, and at the same time protect the States from such as may become paupers and chargeable to the States.

Mr. GOULDEN. Is it not likely that it will ultimately remain in the United States Treasury when the Indian becomes extinct, as seems probable from the history of that famous people?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think not. In some instances we have already caused trust funds of certain tribes of Indians to be distributed per capita among them. I will say, further, that we have provisions of law now that when the Indians ever become competent and capable to manage their own affairs they may make an application to withdraw from the Treasury their pro rata share of the tribal fund.

Mr. GOULDEN. Then the gentleman thinks it is a timely and appropriate period now to erect a statue to the American Indian for fear we may forget what he looks like in the future? I have introduced such a measure and expect to see it enacted into law. The purpose of the bill is to erect in the harbor of New York, where, like the famous Statue of Liberty, it may be seen by the millions landing at that great port, a heroic figure of an American Indian. Public-spirited, patriotic citizens, headed by that well-known man, Mr. Rodman Wanamaker, propose to finance the proposition without any expense to the city, State, or Nation. All hail to such men!

Mr. ADAIR. Who fixes this rate of interest?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The rate of interest is fixed usually by treaty or agreement. There are statutes on the subject fixing the rate at 5 per cent.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak to the point of order on the pending section. The Indians that are here authorized to withdraw this money live in my county and the adjoining county. They are the Kiowas, Apaches, and Comanches. They are not withdrawing the money of the Government, but taking the money from their own funds. The necessity for this is apparent when I state that five or six years ago the country formerly owned by the Kiowa and Comanche Indians was allotted to them and the surplus all sold, save 160 acres each. This forces the Indian, instead of roaming over the country, to live on his individual allotment, and he does not have the range and pasture for his stock to run on that he formerly had. It behooves him to begin to live on his own premises and to build houses and build fences and buy stock and improve his own homestead. He can not do it with the money tied up in the Government's hands.

Mr. MANN. The whites who have gone down in that neighborhood and purchased the land adjoining these allotments think themselves very fortunate, do they not, to have 160 acres of land of their own there?

Mr. FERRIS. Well, they were compelled to pay $12.50 an acre for it at the highest bid.

Mr. MANN. The whites paid $12.50 an acre and think themselves very lucky to get it, and they are able to live on 160 acres of land and live well, while the Indian has 160 acres of land that cost him nothing, and he gets interest on the money that the whites paid him besides, and yet the gentleman says that the poor Indian is not able to live.

Mr. FERRIS. In reply to the gentleman, I want to make the same point that I have made heretofore. In the first place, the white man's property, neither real nor personal, is tied up by federal restrictions so that he can neither mortgage, sell, nor alienate it at any time without congressional action. Hence it is not a parallel case, as the gentleman will see.

Mr. MANN. But it pays taxes, and that is more than can be said of the Indian's 160 acres.

Mr. FERRIS. It is taxed after he makes proof, and this land was opened under the homestead law, and he can not make proof under five years, and hence it is not taxable. I want to make a further observation, and that is, that the gentleman has compared the white man with the Indian citizen, which he can not do as far as this tribe of Indians is concerned. The Kiowas and Comanches are not advanced in civilization and are not equal to the white man in industry and business acumen.

Mr. MANN. And they never will be as long as the Government maintains them without work.

Mr. FERRIS. That is perhaps true; but as long as they have the money on deposit, as long as they have land restricted, they perhaps never will work. This is perhaps true of many of us.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] took the floor, I agreed with him that if he took the floor and stirred up the House, so far as I was concerned I would not insist on the point of order. My attention was called to this matter several years ago, maybe last year, when the item was proposed for $500,000, and I made the point of order upon it. My judgment about that at that time is reinforced by the proposition that came before the committee yesterday, that whereas the Alabama Indians in Texas and the Seminole Indians in Florida had lost their large possessions of land, that therefore we should support them; and if we give away the principal of money now belonging to these Indians, in the end, on the same principle, we will be expected to support them. I have reached the conclusion myself—it is not worth very much, but still I entertain it—that the Indians, the great mass of them, just like the whites would be under the same circumstances, will never work until they are compelled to and will never become civilized until they work. If I could get the Government to support me without work, I am inclined to think I would spend my time doing something easier than the work that I now do, and nearly everybody else is in the same fix. But, Mr. Chairman, in deference to the opinion of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] and the committee, at present, and under an enforced obligation, I will withdraw the point of order. Is this to double the amount?

Mr. FERRIS. No.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to that paragraph, which I desire to present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 21, on page 23, insert:

"Provided, That said Indians shall not be required to spend said fund in any licensed trader's store, under any red-card regulation or otherwise, but said Indians shall be permitted to purchase the necessary supplies with said fund wherever they may desire, and said money shall be paid to each individual Indian in person."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order and will yield to me a few minutes. I have presented this amendment at the request of a committee of Kiowa and Comanche Indians, who recently visited this city, composed of Lonewolf and Jim Waldo, from the Kiowa tribe of Indians, and William Tivis, from the Comanche tribe. These Indians are complaining that the Indian traders' stores on the reservation, with whom they are compelled by a regulation of the department to trade, are holding them up by charging them exorbitant prices, and when these payments are made to these Indians—and this payment will amount to something like $150 to each Indian—they are required by the Indian agent at Fort Sill to trade only in these Indian traders' stores. The men owning these stores are licensed as Indian traders upon these reservations. Now, I think it is time, after the Indians have had their lands allotted to them, that we should no longer have licensed Indian traders, and that the Indians should be permitted to have the money mentioned in this appropriation paid them in hand, so that they could trade where they can get their goods the cheaper. These Indians called on me and gave me a memorial to present to Congress when they made this complaint to me, and it seemed to me to be well founded. They stated to me that the Indian traders that they are forced to trade with charge them double prices in their stores for articles, and that they could get the same articles in other stores for much less money, and in many instances the cheaper nonreservation stores on the railroad would be much nearer to their homes than the Indian trader's store. I remember that they said the Indian traders required them to pay for ordinary canned goods 35 cents a can, and that they could purchase at ordinary stores the same goods at one-half the price. They said that that is only one instance of the overcharges on goods sold them by the licensed traders, and that there have been numerous other instances of the same kind. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think if the Government pays them the sum of money called for in this appropriation that we should see that they are not swindled out of it by gross overcharges. This money comes out of their funds, and they should be permitted to trade where they please, and if we ever intend to take the heavy hand of this Government from our wards, we should begin by letting them spend their own money. They desire the privileges of attending to their own business, and, for one, I am in favor of giving them a chance, so they can trade where they can purchase the cheapest and get the best goods possible, and as near as possible to their homes.

Mr. GOULDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. What law is there compelling them to purchase from traders' stores and not allow them to purchase where they desire?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state that it is only a regulation of the department, coming under the general rule that we have been discussing all through this bill, that they are the wards of the Government, and that the Indian Department are agents of the Government of the United States and they have the direction and control over the individual Indians. That is the theory they proceed upon.

Mr. GOULDEN. It certainly is wrong, if that is the case.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think it is the wrong theory. I think after the lands have been allotted to them that their money should be paid to them without any requirement as to how they should spend it; that they should be permitted to expend it wherever they can purchase supplies the cheapest, and I desire in my time, Mr. Chairman, to have read a part of the memorial that they have written Congress upon that subject, beginning at the marked part on page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read in the time of the gentleman from Texas.

The part of the memorial referred to above is as follows:

The purpose of these several meetings of the three tribes especially was that the Government of the United States would provide out of the funds of the three tribes in the Treasury of the United States sufficient money to enable a payment of $100 per capita to be paid to each member of the three tribes. The reason why the Indians desired that a payment of not less than $100 per capita should be made was that at the time of the payments referred to before this only $50 per capita was paid, and of this amount each Indian received very little and some of them nothing at all, for the reason that these payments were charged up to old accounts owing, or claimed to be owing, by the agent to various traders, so that after these accounts which it is said were owing had been settled, there was little or nothing left for the Indians. None of them received more than $12.50 in cash, and many of them much less than that amount, and some none at all. Some of them out of the entire $50 received as little as 10 cents, which they got in the form of a check. We saw some of these checks for 10 cents with our own eyes, so that we know this is true.

When the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was in Oklahoma, all the Indians assembled upon being informed by the policeman that the commissioner was present and had a talk with him. He was told that the Indians expected to send a delegation to Washington regarding this matter, and the conditions were pointed out to him and their need of money. He informed us that he would look up the matter when he returned to Washington and would write us, but we did not hear anything from him. We therefore, in accordance with the desires of our people, came on to Washington.

The three tribes have in the Treasury of the United States ample funds to pay $100 per capita and still keep large amounts of their money in the Treasury of the United States. The last Congress appropriated the sum of $250,000, to be paid out, as all of the members of each of the three tribes understood, per capita. We thought and expected, therefore, that this amount of money would be paid to us, and that we would receive it. We have now found out, however, that this sum of $250,000 was appropriated, not to be paid per capita, but to be spent in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior in such manner as he might propose, and we understand that a large amount of it will go for expenses and for various things that will not benefit the Indians. We want the payment made per capita.

There is in the Treasury besides this, available, $150,000 of interest money due to us and $74,000 of town-site money available for the purpose of making a payment. Our crops have turned out very badly. The drought in 1909 destroyed pretty much all of the crops in that section of Oklahoma, and in the year before that, 1908, the crops also turned out poorly, because violent rainstorms and hail washed them out. The Indians, because of the failures of their crops and the fact that the previous payment was all taken up in payment of old traders' accounts, and the further fact that the payments were long delayed, for as much as eight months, are now in most urgent need of a per capita payment of good size. They need this money immediately, and the same should be made available at once, in order that we may put in crops for the coming season and that our people may get ready at once to raise what is needed for their support for the next year. Also, their houses need attention, and money is absolutely necessary for them. We ask, therefore, that you will provide in the Indian appropriation bill for this year for a payment to us of not less than $100 per capita, and that you will in that appropriation bill make this payment immediately available, so that there may be no delay in our receiving the money. It is needed at once by our people, who are very poor, and must receive some money before the crop season begins. Lease money is due us from time to time, and in the interest of all the members of our tribe, we respectfully memorialize Congress to make provision whereby, out of the money due us, there may be regularly paid to the members of our tribe at stated and set intervals whatever is due to us. We need regular payments, in order that we may count on what is coming to us, and not be compelled to pay high prices for things because of the uncertainty of when we will receive any money.

Our people sent us up here to look after their interests. Since we have reached Washington we have learned that there is an intention on the part of the Government to compel us out of our moneys to pay the running expenses of the agency. We think this is contrary to our treaties with the United States. It is against the custom and principle that always has prevailed at the agency. The Indians believe that if the United States desire to maintain an agency there that then the United States should do as it always has done and bear the expenses of the maintenance of the agency, and not out of the money that is coming to us take a large part of our funds from us for the purpose of maintaining an agency and clerks and schools that we do not believe we should be called upon to pay. The United States has absolute control over these matters and over these employees and if they are to be maintained, the United States should continue to maintain them and not ask the Indians to do so.

DELOS K. LONEWOLF,
Delegate of the Kiowa Tribe of Indians.
JIM WALDO,
Delegate of the Kiowa Tribe of Indians.
WILLIAM TIVIS,
Delegate of the Comanche Tribe of Indians.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, in order to be fair to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, I wish to state that I have had the matter up with him, and he told me that the red-card system, or what is known as really a "duebill system," only prevails among three tribes in the United States. One of them, the Osages, in the district of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCGUIRE], and the Kiowas and Comanches, who have appealed to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] and myself regarding this matter. The commissioner says that he himself thinks the practice is wrong and that it will not be continued after January 1. I want to say, however, in deference to the amendment, unless there is something in the showing or hearing that satisfies the committee that there will not be any more of that, I hope the point of order will not be made against the amendment.

I want to add one word to what has been said. Last spring a payment was made to the Indians about 4 miles from my home town, with which I was very familiar. This payment was made of their own funds and of their own money. As the Indians marched into the pay table, instead of getting $50 of their own money, they got $12.50 and a red card, which is a duebill, and which permitted them to go to the store and trade $37.50 at that particular point. Now, the trouble and difficulty with that is this: Of course I object to it and think it is wrong, because I think they are entitled to have their money or to have the money properly expended for them. But I am opposed to it on practical grounds and upon its practical workings. It often amounts to this: The Indians of the Kiowa and Comanche tribes cover four counties, about 100 miles square. These Indian traders are practically located at one point, about 4 miles from my town. It is an outrage to force an Indian to travel 50 to 100 miles to trade at a particular store, using his own funds.

I do not speak in any manner of criticism, because complaints come to the commissioner often that the Indians are being defrauded, and I am satisfied he thought it an effort on his part to save the Indians from being robbed—doubtless thought it worked to their advantage, and the commissioner has told me, in my own town this summer, and here in Washington also, that there would be no red cards issued after January 1. I am in favor of the amendment, however, if there is any chance that any such practice will ever again prevail.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. These Indians told me but a few days ago while here that the red-card system was still in vogue, and they were complaining, as the gentleman states, that it was promised to them that it should not be in vogue after the 1st of January. I have proposed this amendment in order to cut it off and stop it.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is entirely correct in that regard. They made the same appeal and the same statement to me. They issued another duebill for $12.50 just a few days before the 1st of January. I think perhaps that was in a measure a subterfuge, because they had not intended to use it any more, but to issue it before the 1st of January was within the promise, and so I have made no complaint. But the Indians have appealed to me, just as they did to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS]. The conditions are as they represented them, from my own knowledge, and if there is going to be any more of these red tickets or duebills I should urge this House to adopt the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Of course this amendment relates to this $250,000 appropriation and possibly more. Is that proposition in the current law?

Mr. FERRIS. I take it that it is not. That has been made for the last two or three years to my knowledge.

Mr. MANN. I mean, now, is there any such appropriation in the current appropriation?

Mr. FERRIS. I take it that there is not. This is more of an authorization or withdrawal rather than an appropriation.

Mr. MANN. The red-card system could not be applied to this provision heretofore or at present, because there is no such provision.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman stated a while ago that there was, and I conceded it.

Mr. FERRIS. There may not be authority for the red cards, but it is a good deal like a man being in jail. I do not know whether they have any provocation for putting him there, but he is there. I do not know that they have any authority at law for issuing these red cards or duebills, but they did issue them and did pay the Indians in duebills when they should have been paid in cash and permitted to trade wherever they elect to.

I am inclined to think that is merely a matter of departmental regulation, and there is, perhaps, nothing in the law at all to warrant it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to ask the gentleman a question or two. First, whether there is any fund in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes of Indians?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There is a trust fund of more than three and a half millions of dollars.

Mr. KEIFER. Is it a common fund, so that they have an interest in it equally per capita?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It is; it has never been segregated.

Mr. KEIFER. Then another question: I understand that this sum of $250,000 that is to be withdrawn for the purpose of maintenance and support and improvement of the homesteads of these Indians—if this sum that is appropriated is withdrawn from the Treasury under section 17 of the bill, will there be a less appropriation for the coming fiscal year for these tribes?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There may not be any, and there may be more. There is no appropriation at all. We are simply permitting them now to take from the Treasury a sum of money that belongs to them, and it will be expended under rules and regulations to be promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior for their benefit.

Mr. KEIFER. Is there any appropriation in this bill for the maintenance of these tribes?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No, sir; there is no appropriation whatever.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Permit me to state in this connection that the maintenance and support and improvement of homesteads is only one item. Maintenance and support, which goes to the Indians, is what I am objecting to. I am not objecting to the improvement of the homesteads. I think we may very well let the interest upon the $150,000 of this money go, because I believe that is the interest upon the land, and is due to them, and the $74,000 is due them from the interest on the lots that have been sold in the various towns. There have been three large towns sold, making a total of $234,000. We are appropriating $250,000, only $15,000 more.

Mr. MANN. That is not correct.

Mr. KEIFER. As I understood the distinguished gentleman from Texas, and also from the reading of the paper at the Clerk's desk, there was the sum of $150,000 of interest to the credit of these tribes, and also $74,000 from another source; but that does not provide for the $250,000. Will $150,000, or so much of it, be taken out of the interest fund and then the other fund be absorbed, and the balance of the $250,000 be taken from the principal, or will the whole $250,000 be taken out of the principal of the Indian fund?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is entirely mistaken; this is the interest.

Mr. KEIFER. There is no provision in section 17 of the bill looking to that.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman if there is any existing appropriation for the current fiscal year?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There is not.

Mr. MANN. It does not require any appropriation, but it pays the interest, and when you make an appropriation it is not possible to have the interest on the part drawn.

Mr. KEIFER. I only wish to say——

Mr. MANN. It went out last year.

Mr. KEIFER. I think the policy of maintaining these Indians from such funds originally was bad, and we will perpetuate it as long as there are any Indians, probably.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I feel that I must insist on the point of order. Every person who has an Indian constituency knows that he is constantly being appealed to by the Indians on the one hand and by men who trade with the Indians on the other. The proposed amendment would certainly be in interest of the traders. Under the authority of law they have to operate under certain rules and regulations that are prescribed. There is much that has been asserted here that I can not believe has much foundation for it. As far as the prices that are paid are concerned, they are all approved by the department, and it is the custom of the Indian Office to require traders to observe at these licensed stores the prices that prevail in the locality. I would not like to adopt an amendment that would disturb the regulations of the department on this subject without knowing more about what was in it than I do know about what is in this proposition. Therefore I must insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposed does undoubtedly change existing law, and would be out of order if it were offered to a provision which were itself in order. This paragraph to which the amendment is proposed does not make any appropriation. It is itself legislation upon a general appropriation bill in violation of section 2 of Rule XXI, and a point of order against it must have been sustained had it been proposed. But no point of order having been made, the paragraph remains in the bill by unanimous consent. In such cases it has been ruled over and over again, while a new substantive proposition involving legislation upon a different point would not be in order as an amendment to such paragraph, nevertheless an amendment which is germane, which introduces no new substantive matter of legislation, but is germane to the paragraph itself, is in order.

It seems to the Chair that this proviso is germane to the paragraph, and therefore the point of order is overruled. The Chair, of course, in disposing of the point of order, can not pass upon the merits of the proposition.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then, Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 34.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 53.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of the Arapahoes and Cheyennes who have been collected on the reservations set apart for their use and occupation in Oklahoma, $35,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making this observation: The department might construe the vote that was just taken as a vote in favor of the practice which they have indulged in in the past. On the merits of the proposition as presented to the House I think practically there is a unanimous sentiment that the practice adopted by the department in the past on this matter is not the proper practice.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think it is rather late for the repentance of the gentleman. I am very sorry that he did not repent before.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman need not take it as a repentance. I have seen the gentleman's amendments so often that I never am willing to vote for one of them without a chance to scan it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of the Ponca Indians in Oklahoma, including pay of employees, $8,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I offer the following committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers the following amendment, which the clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 8, page 24, insert:

"For support and education of 500 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Chilocco, Okla., and for pay of superintendent, $83,500; for general repairs and improvements, $6,500; in all, $90,000."

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This is to provide for the maintenance of the Chilocco school, at Chilocco, Okla., for the year beginning July 1, 1910.

Mr. MANN. What is the amount stated in the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is $90,000, a reduction from the appropriation last year, which was $129,400.

Mr. MANN. Why was it left out of the bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL. There was some negotiation between the department and the State of Oklahoma for ceding the school property to the State of Oklahoma, and the matter was passed over in that way.

Mr. MANN. Does the committee leave out items of that sort because somebody is negotiating about something?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not always.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I renew the point of order. I do not think this school ought to be maintained.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That the amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Why? What is the point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think it changes existing law and is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment seems to be a clear, straight appropriation. It attempts no legislation, and therefore changes no existing law, and the Chair sees no reason why it is not germane to the bill. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, from all the facts before me, I can see no reason why this amendment should be adopted. Much has been said here about the fact that the nonreservation schools do not bring the benefits to the Indians that they ought to bring, and I believe that it is the general policy of Congress to abolish these nonreservation schools whenever they can be abolished without injury to the Indians. I understand that the Indian Commissioner is committed to the proposition that this school is not necessary, and that is the reason that this appropriation is not in the bill. There was a proposition looking to the taking over of this school by the State of Oklahoma for asylum purposes, but for some reason that proposition failed and the State of Oklahoma is not now ready to take this school, even if Congress should decide to transfer it. As I understand it, the only reason why the Indian Commissioner consented to this proposition or amendment was that it was necessary to take care of the buildings at this school pending some action or proposed action on the part of Oklahoma. These buildings are worth $194,000, and it is costing this Government a great deal of money to spend $90,000 for twelve months simply to pay for taking care of the buildings and preventing them from going to ruin.

Mr. GOULDEN. Where is this school located?

Mr. BYRNS. Just inside the State of Oklahoma, near the Kansas line.

Mr. GOULDEN. How many children are in that school?

Mr. BYRNS. As I recall it, about 358.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In June there were in attendance there 467.

Mr. GOULDEN. Why would you abolish that school and retain others with a less number of children?

Mr. BYRNS. It appeared in the hearings that it was necessary for those in charge of that school to scour the whole country to secure pupils, and that the pupils now in that school could be as well provided for in other nonreservation schools. It was the intention of the Indian Office that this school should no longer be continued. There are about $194,000 worth of buildings, and 8,500 acres of land, worth $300,000——

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GOULDEN. Are there any other nonreservation schools near there?

Mr. BYRNS. There are, as I understand, many schools where pupils can be taken care of, and it will not deprive any Indian child or student of the privileges and advantages of an education. It seems to me that inasmuch as we have abolished one school in Colorado, and since it ought to be the policy of Congress to abolish all the nonreservation schools when it can be done without injury to the Indians, the time has come when this school should not be continued, and for that reason I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, the committee had this matter up. It is true that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommended that the school be discontinued and given over to the State of Oklahoma, as I stated a moment ago. But this school stands in the same relation to the policy of the Indian Office as any other nonreservation school. There is property there of which the buildings are worth $200,000 and the land is worth from $180,000 to $200,000 more.

Mr. MANN. Why not sell it?

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS. Was it not the purpose and the intention of the Indian Office to discontinue this school?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It was the intention of the Indian Office; yes.

Mr. BYRNS. If that be so, why is it necessary now to spend $90,000 for the purpose of continuing it twelve months?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will state, in answer to the gentleman from Tennessee, that I am not governed, nor are the Members of this House governed, by what the chief of some bureau says. We have a responsibility as well as the bureaus. I know as much about the school at Chilocco as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and perhaps more. I have been there oftener than he. I know how many pupils were there last year, and I know how many are there this year. I know something of the teachers and what is being done there. I think I know the value of the work that is being done. I know of work that is being done in the blacksmith shop by young Indians. I know the work that is being done on the farm by young Indians. I know the work that is being done in the carpenter shop by young Indians. I know the work that is being done in the sewing school by Indian girls. I know of the work that is being done there by Indian girls in the cooking school, and I think all this work is beneficial to the Indians, and would insist that the school should be continued, even if the Commissioner of Indian Affairs were here now protesting against it. I am informed there are 467 pupils there now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware that the commissioner stated, both verbally and in writing, that these Indians could be taken care of in other schools and the school at Chilocco abandoned?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is true that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs did so state when we were making up this appropriation bill, but it is also true that he stated a few days ago, when I offered this amendment in committee, that the school ought to be appropriated for this year.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GOULDEN. What has the gentleman from Kansas to say in regard to the charge made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] that the authorities of the school at Chilocco scoured the whole country in order to fill it with students or pupils?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That can be charged, no doubt, against the state university of every State in the Union, against every denominational school throughout the country, against private schools everywhere. It can be charged against the school at Carlisle, Pa., against the Haskell School in Kansas. It can probably be charged, with the same foundation of truth, against every Indian school in the country as well as against the school at Chilocco.

Mr. FERRIS. Does not the gentleman think it better policy to maintain a school in Oklahoma, where there are more than 100,000 Indians living, rather than to maintain a school a thousand miles from even one Indian?

Mr. CAMPBELL. If a policy were involved here instead of a practical proposition, undoubtedly I would take that position.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman in favor of abolishing the schools at Hampton and Carlisle? If so, I will vote with him.

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; I am not in favor of abolishing these schools; they are doing splendid work for the Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then the gentleman is in favor of nonreservation schools?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am, as well as reservation schools.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Why not take the Indian children all off the reservations and put them in these nonreservation schools?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would not do that nor contend that, but I would provide schools for Indians away from their homes as well as at their homes. I see no reason why a young Indian should not be permitted to go away from home to school, if he desires, as well as a white man. Chilocco is close to the Indians and is doing as good work for them as any Indian school either on or off a reservation. It should, at an early day, be made a school of agriculture for the Indians of the United States. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the Chilocco school is located in the First Congressional District of Oklahoma. That is the district that I represent. I am quite familiar with this school, and have been since it was first constructed, in 1888, I believe. I have had an opportunity to observe the work done there for a number of years. I expect to vote for this amendment. This is the last time that I shall ever vote for the appropriation for that school. Every Indian reservation in Oklahoma has been opened up to settlement. What I mean by that is that the Indians have taken their allotments, and the surplus lands in nearly every instance have been sold to white people. In practically every reservation, or what were once Indian reservations, there are day schools, schoolhouses constructed by the white people, and white settlements, and for that reason at the present time, with the exception of one or two reservations, the Indian pupils have an opportunity to attend day schools, thereby relieving the Government, to some extent at least, of the necessity of appropriating for these institutions. About one-third of the real estate in Oklahoma—that is, the land in Oklahoma—is nontaxable for the reason that it is composed of Indian allotments. I have believed, and I believe now by reason of that condition, that the State of Oklahoma, when this institution is discontinued as an educational institution for Indian purposes, is entitled to receive that institution from the United States Government. The taxpayers of that State have earned the institution by reason of the fact that one-third of the land in that State at this time, as I said before, is nontaxable, and if it could be determined now whether that institution could be given to the State for the purpose most desired by the people of the State, and if conditions were such in my State that we could agree upon the character of the institution that we would like to have as a state institution out of this, I would be at this time in favor of the discontinuance of this appropriation.

But while the legislature of the State of Oklahoma has requested of Congress this property, there seems to be some contention as to the use to which it shall be put. Some want it for a soldiers' home, and others for an agricultural and mechanical institution, and some for one purpose and some for another. I believe that if this appropriation is made at this time for the coming fiscal year for this school the people of the State of Oklahoma will be of one mind at the next session of Congress as to what it may be desired for in case the Congress of the United States desires to give it to the State. For that reason I expect to vote at this time for this amendment.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman to say that this is the last time he will vote for an appropriation of this kind. That carries with it the idea, of course, that such school is not necessary and can be abandoned without injury to anyone, and I understand him further to say that it is the idea and hope that Congress will give this building and this property to the State of Oklahoma for certain purposes. Do I understand the gentleman to take this position, that the National Government ought to expend $6,500 or thereabouts for repairs, and about $83,000 for the maintenance of that school for twelve months in order to hold it until it can give it to the people of the State of Oklahoma in twelve months from now?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has stated his case a little strongly. It is not a useless expenditure. The capacity of this school is 750 pupils. A telegram from the superintendent of the school only a few days ago states that there are now 368 pupils in attendance at this time, so the appropriation is not a useless appropriation. The school has now almost half its capacity.

Mr. BYRNS. Was it not the judgment of the Indian Commissioner that this school could be abolished, and was it not his opinion that it ought to be abolished or discontinued?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The gentleman is correct in that. The commissioner was inclined to the discontinuance of this institution. I am inclined very much toward the discontinuance of this institution, but at the same time I should like to see my State make application for it when the United States is done with it. The pupils are there, and this appropriation is not solely for the purpose of keeping the premises in repair. There were 368 pupils the 1st of this month in attendance. I am going to vote for this amendment at this time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that the best use that could be made of the building would be to let the State have it for agricultural and mechanical schools or an industrial school, in other words, and permit the Indians to attend it, as well as the white citizens of the State, and thus benefit both?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I think the best way to determine that is to let the State determine what it wants it for. It has not been able to do so yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fulfilling treaties with Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi, Oklahoma: For permanent annuity, in goods or otherwise (article 3, treaty of November 3, 1804), $1,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the paragraph just read, lines 5 to 8, inclusive, page 25, may be passed without prejudice, for the purpose of taking them up later on.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The sum of $1,000,000 placed upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi tribe of Indians by authority of the act approved March 3, 1909, or any part thereof, shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum so long as it remains in the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. I would like to understand the situation and know why it should be agreed to, if at all.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will state that in the last appropriation act for 1910 the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to place upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the Sac and Fox Indians of the Mississippi tribe the unexpended sum of $200,000, due under article 2 of the treaty of October 21, 1837, and $800,000 under article 2 of the treaty of October 11, 1842. That was the sum of money that was due to these Indians under those treaties to which I have referred. The act directing the placing to their credit this sum of money did not state what rate of interest was to be paid thereon. Upon looking over the treaties referred to we found that the rate of interest provided was 5 per cent. I may add that originally the committee fixed the rate at 3 per cent, but changed it to conform to the law on the subject. The purpose in placing this money to the credit of these Indians is to make it possible to pay it out to them and get rid of the obligation that has been upon the Government all these years of making annual appropriations equivalent to the amount of interest at this rate of 5 per cent.

Mr. MANN. Well, what provision in the current appropriation does the gentleman refer to? The sum mentioned in the bill is $1,000,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. On page 26 of the act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910——

Mr. MANN. I am looking at it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota (continuing). It is provided that the Secretary of the Treasury shall place upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of these Indians the sum of $1,000,000. Now, that is in accordance with the acts that authorize the capitalization, I presume—I was not on the committee when that was done—but the reference there, I apprehend, is to authority that directed an agreement to be made with the Indians on the basis of commuting or capitalizing this fund. We have a provision that I expect to offer as a committee amendment at the end of this bill to capitalize some of the treaty obligations which are now covered in the bill, and I have requested that they be passed without prejudice for the purpose of later striking them out if the House accepts the capitalization proposition.

Mr. MANN. What I am trying to get at is the question of interest. We are not obliged to capitalize these matters at all.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. We are not.

Mr. MANN. If we have them capitalized, are we obliged to pay 5 per cent interest?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Oh, undoubtedly; that is the agreement, and the gentleman will find that it does not change the obligation of the Government one iota. If we are required to pay the Indians a certain sum of money annually and we capitalize that on a 5 per cent basis, we go on and pay them 5 per cent because it is a mere book transaction, and we simply credit the Indians with the amount on the books of the Treasury. If we wish to get rid of the interest on the obligation, all we need to do is dispose of the fund by paying it out to the Indians and then the obligation will be discharged.

Mr. MANN. If we make no change in the situation whatever, I can not see the object in capitalizing.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. We get rid of the obligation——

Mr. MANN. How do you get rid of the obligation if you agree to pay them 5 per cent interest on it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. We must make it possible to get rid of it, otherwise it will go on for all time. We are making payments now annually to some of the New York Indians on a basis of 6 or 7 per cent interest. In one instance I remember on a basis of $100,000 we are paying those Indians annually $6,000 or $7,000, and we have got to go on paying that to them for all time unless we enter into some agreement by which we can settle with them and get rid of the obligation. We have in this bill, perhaps some gentleman may have noticed it, a provision requiring us for all time to deliver at the city of Chicago annually 50 barrels of salt to certain Indians. Now, there are no Indians residing within a thousand miles of Chicago——

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken; there are a great number of Indians residing in the city of Chicago. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I stand corrected, Mr. Chairman, but I was going to say we have commuted that by paying them $50 in money.

Now, I believe the proposition here is to set aside in the Treasury $1,000 and pay it out to the Indians, and until we do pay it out to them we will pay them $50 a year. We are not out one cent. It is a transaction that the Government certainly gets the best of.

Mr. MANN. Here is the position, if the gentleman will pardon me. We have now a treaty with the Indians by which we agree to pay them certain amounts of money for certain purposes, or generally. Now, the gentleman proposes to say we shall substitute in place of that authority an act of Congress putting into the Treasury a certain amount of money due to them. If we can wipe the treaty out of existence by act of Congress in that way, we can do it at any time when we desire to pay the principal of the money. It is a treaty with the Indians in every case.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think it is.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's proposition enables the amount in this bill——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to my friend that the item we are referring to has already been capitalized. We are not proposing to capitalize.

Mr. MANN. I am now talking about the other items in the bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have agreements here with each band of Indians, signed by a majority of them.

Mr. MANN. You have no agreement with the Indians that has been ratified by Congress.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The agreement is here to be ratified, and the statute of 1871 prohibited the making of further treaties with Indians, and since that time they have been called agreements. This proposition was capitalized exactly as we propose to capitalize those in the amendment to be offered. This fund has been placed to the credit of these Indians, but for some reason they omitted to state what rate of interest it bears. We examined the treaty and found it requires a rate of 5 per cent, and therefore we have made the rate 5 per cent.

Mr. MANN. Now, I call the attention of the gentleman to the proposition involved. The current law provides:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the books of the Treasury Department to the credit of these Indians the unappropriated sum of $200,000 due under the second article of the treaty of October 21, 1837.

It may be that that is for the capitalization of sums due the Indians, but I do not read it that way, nor did I understand it that way last year; nor did I understand when this item went in the bill, and there was some discussion on it, that we were under obligation to pay 5 per cent on this amount.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if we were not obligated to pay the $200,000 and $800,000?

Mr. MANN. Whether we were or not——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. We are paying them the equivalent of 5 per cent interest on this amount.

Mr. MANN. That is what I am trying to ascertain.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I said to the gentleman a few moments ago that originally we adopted the rate of 3 per cent, but subsequently, upon further investigation of the law and treaties, we felt compelled to and did change the rate from 3 to 5 per cent.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt the gentleman's committee had good reason for it, and yet might make a mistake about it, like some of the rest of us very often do. It is perfectly plain the item that went into the bill last year was not for the purpose of capitalization of the amount due the Indians at all.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I stated frankly to the gentleman that I presume that is the way it went in, but it does not make any difference. It is a treaty obligation. We owe the Indians this sum of money, and have been paying what was equivalent to 5 per cent interest upon it. This makes it possible to get rid of the obligation some time or other.

Mr. MANN. If we have a treaty obligation, that is the law of the land, is it not?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Then what is the object of putting it into the bill? It does not help it any.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Because it has been held, I understand, that the interest can not be paid to them unless there is this authority now, which changes the act and changes existing law, in which no provision is made for interest.

Mr. MANN. If we are under legal obligation to pay 5 per cent interest, that is a legal obligation that exists. No act of Congress stating that fact will make it any stronger.

If we are under no legal obligation to pay 5 per cent interest, I can see no reason why we should pay 5 per cent. As I understand the matter, I will explain in a general way how the item is now in the bill. I would like the gentleman's judgment on that matter. There is now no appropriation made by Congress under which to pay interest due upon this sum of money in the Treasury. There is not always an appropriation. I suppose if we insert this item in the bill that the 5 per cent interest is paid automatically without any appropriation by Congress.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I assume that is the case, and probably it may be paid.

Mr. MANN. And if it is paid, there is no legal obligation. Do you not think the Government and the Indian would be better off if we appropriated the interest on the amount in the Treasury, so that we would know something about how much money these Indians get out of the Treasury every year? There is no one here can tell. Does the gentleman know how much interest we pay annually from the Treasury?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. About $2,000,000 is either paid to them or credited to them on the books of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt the gentleman is correctly informed on that matter. But I desire to say that the gentleman, with great knowledge on Indian affairs, is not able to say how much is paid to this tribe or to that tribe, although we make appropriations for the same Indians in other directions without knowing how much we are paying to-day. I think it is a very bad policy. But I am not going to set my judgment on this matter up against that of the committee, as long as we have entered upon this extremely bad policy—it is only $1,000,000 more—where we take it absolutely out of our control so far as the interest is concerned, when I believe the interest ought to be in the control of the Committee on Indian Affairs making the appropriation, and then by Congress. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GOULDEN. What is the purpose of this capitalization, and what is the advantage to the Government paying the interest annually of $50,000?

Mr. MANN. This is not capitalized at all.

Mr. GOULDEN. Then what was it?

Mr. MANN. It was simply a declaration by Congress that they had $1,000,000 growing out of two treaties, due to these Indians, in the Treasury, the purpose being when they inserted the item in the bill to escape the appropriations annually, on the payment of the interest, but it was not drawn properly by the Indian Office, and it did not accomplish the purpose.

Mr. GOULDEN. Well, Mr. Chairman, what is the advantage to the Government to have to pay 5 per cent or $50,000 a year on this?

Mr. MANN. Because, I will be frank to the gentleman——

Mr. GOULDEN. I am seeking information.

Mr. MANN. Because the Government is now under obligation to pay 5 per cent, or to appropriate annually the interest on $200,000 at 5 per cent, which would be $10,000, and the interest on $800,000 at 5 per cent annually. There was no declaration that this $1,000,000 was in the Treasury, although we had the money, and paid the interest on it.

Mr. GOULDEN. What is the objection to returning this money to the Indians and getting rid of it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is just what this proposes to do ultimately.

Mr. MANN. The objection to it is that if we do it, and they spend the money in a little while, which they would do, then it would be our duty to support these Indians.

Mr. GOULDEN. They are entitled to spend their own money, are they not?

Mr. MANN. They are not entitled to spend it unless they can get it.

Mr. GOULDEN. As they are entitled to spend their own money the same as anybody else, why should we object?

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Under the head of section 18, Five Civilized Tribes, there are various paragraphs in the bill, apparently ending with the item on the top of page 27, "in all, $200,000." I beg to ask whether that is to be treated as one paragraph in the reading of it or as separate paragraphs? While it is printed in paragraphs, it is practically all one.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Treat it as one paragraph; let it be read as one proposition.

Mr. MANN. That is perfectly satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the entire section 18, down to and including line 3, on page 27, shall be treated as one paragraph. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

SEC. 18. For expense of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes at Union Agency, Okla., including the salary of superintendent, at not to exceed $4,500 per annum, and the compensation of all employees whose continued employment may be necessary for the purposes for which appropriations were made in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1910, as follows:

"For pay of superintendent at the Union Agency, Okla.;

"For special clerical force in the office of the United States Indian agent, Union Agency, and miscellaneous expenses in connection with entering of remittances received on account of payments of town lots and issuance of patents;

"For clerical work and labor connected with the leasing of Creek and Cherokee lands for mineral and other purposes, and the leasing of lands of full-blood Indians under the act of April 26, 1906, and acts amendatory thereto;

"For appraising, clerical work, and labor connected with the sale of restricted lands, Five Civilized Tribes;

"For the purpose of removing intruders and placing allottees in unrestricted possession of their allotments, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior;

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the provisions of the act approved April 21, 1904, and section 1 of the act of May 27, 1908, for the removal of restrictions upon the alienation of lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes;

"For the completion of the work heretofore required by law to be done by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes;

"For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Oklahoma, and for pay of employees;

"In all, $200,000."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to that.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. It is subject to a point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have an amendment that I desire to give notice of.

Mr. MANN. I should like to have the amendment read for information. It may affect my judgment as to the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, which is out of order at this time, will be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 24, page 26, insert:

"Provided, That said commission shall be required to enroll all Mississippi Choctaws who removed to the Indian Territory, now Oklahoma, and made application for citizenship prior to February 1, 1907, where it appears of record that the applicant or ancestor through whom claim is made received patent of land under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, or scrip in lieu thereof, shall have their cases considered by the Secretary of the Interior upon the merits, and if found entitled to enrollment, such applicants shall be placed on the rolls and given lands and funds, the same as any other Choctaw Indians in Oklahoma."

Mr. CARTER. I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MANN. That is not necessary. It is only read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment is not yet pending.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] knows my views in reference to segregating appropriations. Last year these items were under eight paragraphs in different amounts. What reason has the gentleman for lumping these appropriations?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think I will demonstrate that this is not subject to legitimate criticism, even if other groupings in the bill may be.

Originally we had a provision of law for what was known as the "Dawes Commission," which operated down there in the nation to settle the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes. That went on year after year. Large appropriations were made for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Dawes Commission. I think I remember that about ten years ago there were inquiries as to when the Dawes Commission would complete their labors. Assurances were given annually that they would probably finish within the next fiscal year. Then at the end of the year we would have the same old assurance that they thought they would get through in the next fiscal year. The reasons for prolonging the work were given, first one thing and then another. By court decisions members had been added to the rolls of the tribe, and there were other things of a similar nature. Finally the Dawes Commission was discontinued, and a commissioner was authorized by law to do the work that the Dawes Commission had formerly performed. In the last appropriation bill and in the present law a limitation was placed upon the appropriation for the pay of the commissioner, and the Secretary of the Interior was directed to disburse the appropriation so as to complete said work by July 1, 1910. So I apprehend that a year ago the committee thought this work could be completed by that time.

Now, we have found this year that, for one reason or another, it will not be possible to complete that work by June 30 of the present year. Estimates were submitted increasing the appropriation for this purpose, and the support and maintenance of the Union Agency, by $2,000. We believe the time is approaching when we ought to discontinue these large appropriations for the purpose of settling the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes. While we were satisfied it could not be done entirely at present, we concluded that we would see if it was not possible to continue the work at much less expense. Our investigations brought out the fact that under the present system there is more or less duplication of work. Two men are employed, one under one appropriation and one under another, to do the work of one, and if this appropriation is put in one item and disbursed under one head, the same work can go on that has been going on for the past year, at less expense, without any injury whatever to the service.

We took the item, which was last year $140,000, and put it with other appropriations for the Five Civilized Tribes and reduced the total to $200,000—a reduction from the estimate of $61,500 and a reduction from the current appropriation of $59,500. We believe that by another year this can be reduced very much more; how much we can not now say, but we are certain that it can be very materially reduced.

[The time of Mr. BURKE having expired, his time was extended five minutes.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will say that the purpose was in the interest of economy; that the segregation in the existing law really accomplished nothing whatever except to duplicate work and multiply expense. Therefore, for all of these reasons we have made a lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what the chairman of the committee has said, I desire to state that practically now the whole work in the Indian Territory, or what was formerly the Indian Territory, for Oklahoma, is done by the agent at the Union Indian Agency at Muskogee. The Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes having been abolished, we now have only one agency, and that is known as the Union Agency, a combination of all others, as I understand it, and the agent of this Union Agency can transfer from one department to another and from one kind of work to another any of the employees in the Indian Service in Oklahoma. We have had a special force there for clerical work connected with the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes for years, and another for appraising, clerical, and other work—including allotting, removal of trespassers, and so forth—connected with the sale of their lands. Now, a man who appraises Indian lands or the lands of one Indian tribe can, when through, appraise the value of the lands of other tribes, because the whole force is under the control of one man, the Union agent. One of the paragraphs in this section is for the purpose of removing intruders and placing allottees in the unrestricted possession of their allotments. Another one is to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the provisions of the act approved April 21, 1904, for the removal of restrictions upon the alienation of lands of the allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes.

All that work is to be done by the agents of the department in and under the Union Agency, and there is no reason why the Union agent should not have the control of all the funds, and they should have the right to apportion the funds. It would be a different proposition if you had one agent in each of the tribes. These men would have to keep separate accounts, but here we have but one agency and one set of books and bookkeepers, all under the control of one man—the Union agent—who should direct this entire matter; hence the appropriation has been properly grouped under a lump-sum appropriation, and therefore is not subject to the objections urged against it by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to read for the information of the committee a portion of the hearings upon this subject before the committee. I think the House ought to have the benefit of the information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will read in his time.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This is the statement of Mr. Valentine, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Valentine, I want to ask you about the estimates for the Union Agency and the Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes, which aggregate $261,500, and I want, in this connection, to ask you whether or not the work now done under these two organizations can not be done under one?

Mr. VALENTINE. That has been my opinion, Mr. Chairman, for the last three years.

Mr. BURKE. Would the work, in your opinion, be done as well or better than it is now being done at present?

Mr. VALENTINE. Better.

Mr. BURKE. If the positions are consolidated, could this estimate of $261,500 be reduced; and if so, how much?

Mr. VALENTINE. I feel certain it could be reduced to $200,000.

Mr. BURKE. Why would there be this saving?

Mr. VALENTINE. There is a great deal of duplication and loss in administrative machinery through two bureaus, differently organized, handling, largely, closely related work, if not, in some cases, identical work.

Mr. BURKE. If there is this consolidation and there should be an appropriation of $200,000, could this be further reduced without injury to the administration of affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in another year?

Mr. VALENTINE. Yes, sir; I would take the contract for that tomorrow.

Mr. BURKE. Can you estimate about how much it would probably be reduced?

Mr. VALENTINE. No, sir.

Mr. BURKE. Would it likely be reduced for the next few years each year, in your opinion?

Mr. VALENTINE. If there is no new legislation demanding more work or no further complications resulting from any cases now pending in court, I think there should be a reduction from year to year.

Mr. BURKE. I am asking you these questions, Mr. Commissioner, because in the last appropriation bill there was a provision directing the Secretary of the Interior to complete the work required to be done by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes by July 1, 1910. I assume there is work yet to be done that will have to be provided for?

Mr. VALENTINE. There is.

Mr. BURKE. It is your opinion that that work can be done under the union agency the same as it is done under the present system?

Mr. VALENTINE. Yes, sir.

The next day the commissioner was before the committee and made this statement—that he had brought this matter to the attention of the Secretary of the Interior, and informed him of what he had stated to the subcommittee, and he said the Secretary authorized him to say that he, the Secretary, would be glad to have him state to the committee that he is in heartiest accord with the proposed consolidation of the funds if, as he believes, it is in line with a reduction of expenses and at the same time a betterment of administration.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this item in the current appropriation bill is segregated, and may I ask the gentleman, in making up their figures at $200,000, if they have taken the estimates for these various purposes for which specific appropriations were made last year as the amount necessary to be expended?

I notice that the estimates on the specific items are less than the appropriation. For instance, at the top of page 26, for special clerical force, and so forth, the office of the United States Indian Agency, the estimate is $5,750, while the appropriation is $6,000. For clerical work and labor connected with the leasing of Creek and Cherokee lands, and so forth, the estimate is $19,250, while the current appropriation is $30,000. For appraising, clerical work, and labor connected with the sale of restricted lands of the Five Civilized Tribes the estimate is $18,500, while the appropriation is $25,000. For the purpose of removing intruders and placing allottees in unrestricted possession of their allotments the estimate is $10,000, while the current appropriation is $17,000. I can apprehend that there might naturally be a considerable reduction in the total amount on the estimates; is that the way the reduction is made?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, some of these items are quite materially reduced from the current appropriation and the estimates because that particular work is approaching its completion. There is not so much to do. We took into consideration all of these circumstances and the fact that there was more or less duplication of employment, and we felt that we could make these reductions.

Mr. MANN. I can not see where the gentleman has reduced anything on account of duplication. That is what I was trying to get at. I do not see any reduction on account of duplication in the existing law. In their estimates they did not ask for these items to be combined. They assumed that these items would be separated, and made their estimates or segregated the items and made the reduction because the work has ceased.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will refer to the estimates, he will find on page 109 an estimate of $65,500 that perhaps he has not taken into consideration.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And if he will examine the current law on page 27, he will find an appropriation in a lump sum of $140,000.

Mr. MANN. Yes; I thought of that; but where is the estimate in here for completing the work of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes? Is not that the estimate?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. On page 109 of the estimates, I think.

Mr. MANN. Sixty-five thousand five hundred dollars—well, if the gentleman will add up all of his estimates, it will not amount to $200,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will give the gentleman the estimates if he desires them. They are as follows:

Incidentals in Oklahoma (pay of employees)	$22,000
Pay of superintendent, Union Agency	4,500
Clerical and other expenses, town lots, Union Agency, Five Civilized Tribes	5,750
Leasing of mineral and other lands, Five Civilized Tribes	19,250
Sale of restricted lands, Five Civilized Tribes	18,500
Removal of intruders, Five Civilized Tribes	10,000
Removal of restrictions, allotted lands, Five Civilized Tribes	16,000
Salaries, etc., Five Civilized Tribes	65,500
Sale of unallotted lands, etc., Five Civilized Tribes	100,000
Total	261,500

Mr. MANN. Yes; I want to know what this $100,000 item is. According to the gentleman's figures, the cost of completing the work of the Five Civilized Tribes, which, under the current appropriation bill, ceases on the last of next June, for the next fiscal year, instead of being reduced, is to be considerably increased.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I invite the gentleman's attention to item 113 of the estimates, which provides for $100,000.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am familiar with that. We made an appropriation this year of $140,000 to complete the work of the commission.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Now you carry items in this sum of $165,500 to complete the work of the commission.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is the cost of the completion of the work of the commission to be greater next year than this year?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The estimates were the same. The estimates this year were $100,000 and $65,500. The appropriation last year was $140,000 and $25,000 for contingent expenses in Oklahoma.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; we made the appropriation of $22,000 for contingent expenses last year.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Twenty-two thousand dollars of the $25,000 for contingent purposes was used in connection with $140,000, so that the whole amount used was $162,000. I want to go a little further and say, in addition to what I have said, that I am of the opinion that some of these expenditures being made at the present time in connection with the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes may possibly be paid from their own funds in the future without violating any law or treaty obligation. I have been unable and the committee has been unable in the limited time that we have had to ascertain definitely in this respect, but I think I can say to the gentleman from Illinois that this appropriation from now on will be a disappearing proposition.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have been in the House for the last thirteen years, and I never have been in the House a single year when the Committee on Indian Affairs had its appropriation bill up for consideration that I have not heard that same statement about the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And perhaps this is the first year when there has been a reduction made.

Mr. MANN. But there is no reduction made this year. On the contrary, there is an increase.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman can find that we have appropriated more money than was carried in the last bill, I have nothing further to say on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

[By unanimous consent Mr. MANN was granted five minutes more.]

Mr. MANN. I think I can demonstrate to the gentleman. The appropriation for the current year for the completion of the Five Civilized Tribes was $140,000. In addition to that we appropriated for incidental expenses of the Indian Service in Oklahoma $22,000. That would make $162,000. Whether they have wiggled in any other appropriation I do not know. The $22,000 appropriation was not made for that purpose, and it was illegal to use it for that purpose, but illegality often does not stop a department, but it amounted to $162,000. Now, the appropriation the gentleman proposes this year to finish the work that is to be completed this year, the appropriation he proposes to be expended next year to finish the work which is to be completed this year, is $165,500. Of course, that is only $3,500——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let me ask the gentleman if he has taken into consideration, on page 26 of the bill, under the item of the Five Civilized Tribes, items aggregating $93,000 appropriated for last year which are included in this appropriation of $200,000?

Mr. MANN. Oh, those items last year amounted to $97,500.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Ninety-three thousand dollars and $4,500 for the salary of the agent.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman in making up his estimates this year figures upon $100,000 for certain services of the commission for making allotments and $65,500 for clerical services; that is, $165,500. Now, the total appropriation for this current fiscal year is $140,000, as I understand it, and then $22,000 they have gouged out of another appropriation, and that would make $162,000, and you are increasing that——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Why, not at all.

Mr. MANN. If $165,500 is not more than $162,060 my arithmetic is at fault.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. But the sum of $200,000 is to cover the same items for which we appropriated last year $259,500.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, here are certain items which were all appropriated last year amounting to $97,500. Part of that work has been done, and the department did not ask for the same amount of money for that work for they were not combining these items.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; they asked for something new.

Mr. MANN. Not in this connection they did not; at least I have not been able to get at it. If you have them, I would like to know what they are.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The sixty-five thousand five hundred is new——

Mr. MANN. I have counted that; it is not new to me. Here is the situation, as far as the estimates are concerned. The department found they had no authority to make estimates for completing the work of the Five Civilized Tribes, because the law forbade them to make estimates for that purpose; therefore they made an estimate in some other way. Well, I do not find fault with the department for that. I think they had a license to do it. Of course it is subject to the point of order, but that does not make any difference. What I want to get at is, is there any prospect or possibility of ever ending the work of the Five Civilized Tribes or the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes so long as we are willing to pay a lot of handsome gentlemen in Oklahoma out of the Treasury for doing work which the Government is under no obligation to do and pay for itself?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have said, Mr. Chairman, that we have gotten rid of $59,500 this year. I am in hopes that we can get rid of a good deal more than that next year. Beyond that I can not speak.

Mr. MANN. I desire to say to the gentleman that we have not reduced it one cent as far as the completion of this work of the commission is concerned.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman may have convinced himself of that fact.

Mr. MANN. Well, of course the gentleman in charge of a bill is never convinced, because he represents the committee that has taken action and is not at liberty to express an opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

The Chair did not understand whether the gentleman from Illinois insisted upon his point of order.

Mr. MANN. I am inclined to insist upon the point of order unless the gentleman can give us some assurance of what is going to become of this commission.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I thought we had taken steps to get rid of the commission. That is what we aimed to do. We can not do it, however, before the 1st of July.

Mr. MANN. It is very much like the Immigration Commission. We have been fighting around and finally concluded to end it. I suppose the Immigration Commission will come in after the 1st of March and want more money and more salaries. We have a provision in the law that this work shall be completed by the 1st of July, 1910.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think not. I think that is a mere limitation in the appropriation made for the current year.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to let the Chair rule on that question and take his judgment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CARTER. I want to ask the gentleman not to insist on his point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman has asked me to give him some assurance as to how long this commission is going to continue. I have already stated, Mr. Chairman, that this proposition is looking toward getting through with that commission, and I think it is the beginning of the end. I have stated that it is my judgment that in another year we will reduce this appropriation again very materially. Beyond another year I can not speak, because I do not know whether I will be in a position at that time to have anything to say about what shall happen, so far as this item or any other item that may come before this House is concerned.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will give me an assurance in regard to it, and I should happen to be here, as I might be, I will follow the directions of the gentleman.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If I should not be here, I will say, Mr. Chairman, I do most sincerely hope that my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will be here.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's absence would make it very unpleasant for me to remain. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat in doubt about whether I should insist upon the point of order, but I am going to call the attention of the Chair to a proposition, at least. The current law, on page 27 of the pamphlet, provides:

> Appropriations for completion of the work heretofore required by law to be done by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, $140,000, said appropriation to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secertary of the Interior is directed to so disburse this appropriation as to complete said work by July 1, 1910.

I apprehend, although I am not absolutely certain, that that is a limitation upon the amount of money that may be appropriated for that purpose. But if that limitation is made, I apprehend that making this appropriation would not affect the limitation, and that if the point of order would be good now it might be good another year, although upon that I do not feel positively certain. Yet in view of the insistence of the gentleman I do not feel warranted in interposing a captious or technical objection to the work of this commission, although I have long been of the impression that it ought to be abolished.

I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have an amendment which I desire to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has an amendment which the Clerk will read in its modified form.

The Clerk read as follows:

> At the bottom of page 26 add the following:
> "Provided, That said commission shall be required to enroll all of the Mississippi Choctaw Indians who removed to the Indian Territory, now Oklahoma, prior to February 1, 1907, and made application for citizenship, where it appears by said application that the applicant or ancestor of the applicant has received patent of land under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, or scrip in lieu thereof, if found entitled to enrollment."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, it has been some time since these Mississippi Choctaw Indian rolls have been closed. Since they have been closed it has been ascertained that many Indians have not been enrolled whose ancestors received patents in Mississippi for land or received scrip which entitles them to lands. The children and descendants of some of these recognized Mississippi Choctaw Indians have removed to the Indian Territory for the purpose of securing homes there, the removal being within the time required by law. These Indians, by some kind of legal legerdemain that I will not now endeavor to explain, have been deprived of the right of enrollment. They are not on the roll, yet by blood they are Indians and legally entitled to enrollment. They have lost their right as citizens, yet there is no question but that some of them are the descendants of Indians who had land patented to them in Mississippi and who received scrip in lieu of these lands elsewhere, and were on the rolls of the Mississippi Choctaw Indians, and were recognized as originally being Mississippi Choctaw Indians by reason of the Government issuing patents and scrip for lands to their ancestors.

When they were removed to the Indian Territory, now Oklahoma, a few years ago, they should have been enrolled and permitted to share in the funds and lands coming to the Choctaw Indians in that State. They have been deprived of that right. I have narrowed the amendment I offer down to the very lowest possible limit, and under its provisions but a few Indians can be enrolled. They can not be enrolled unless they show by competent evidence that their direct ancestors had received lands or land scrip from the Government of the United States heretofore as Choctaw Indians. What better evidence would they want to establish their rights than that they are the direct descendants of those who have received lands from the United States Government as Choctaws? Would not that be sufficient to entitle them to receive lands in Oklahoma? That is all this amendment does. I do not think it should be or is subject to the point of order made by the chairman of the committee, because this amendment is added to the provision for the completion of work that the commission was heretofore required by law to do for the Five Civilized Tribes.

The Commissioners to the Five Civilized Tribes were charged with the duty of ascertaining who should be placed on these rolls, and this duty of enrollment of qualified Indians has been a part of their work for many years. That work is not yet complete, and we have found that many Indians have been deprived of their right of enrollment. The Indians covered by this amendment certainly should be placed on those rolls before the commission is discharged. Probably, looking at the matter purely from a selfish standpoint, if I were in the Indian Territory and had my name placed on the rolls and was getting the benefit of these funds I might selfishly contend that these Indians were not entitled to be on the rolls. I presume that every Choctaw on the rolls in the Indian Territory is entitled to and will receive from five to ten thousand dollars' worth of property. Hence they object to anybody coming in and getting part of their patrimony.

Mr. Chairman, there are yet 400,000 acres of land unallotted and funds unallotted still belonging to the Choctaw tribe, and before these funds are allotted, before this land has gone from the power and possession of the United States and into the hands of innocent purchasers, these Mississippi Choctaw Indians should be protected, and everyone entitled to enrollment should be enrolled and receive their pro rata share of the tribal estate. If that is not done, they will be knocking at the doors of Congress for the next fifty years, stating that their claims were rejected when they were just. It is the duty of this Government to ascertain who its wards really are and to legally enroll them and set apart to them their property; and if we do not treat them thus justly and fairly, we will have committed a great moral wrong. This moral obligation rests upon us and can never be paid until justice is done to these Mississippi Choctaw Indians.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from South Dakota will permit the amendment of the gentleman from Texas to be passed. These Mississippi Choctaws are not numerous. They are descendants of those Indians who never drew a sword against the white man. They are descendants of those Indians who fought with Andrew Jackson at New Orleans. They are Indians that have always been true to the white man and to his Government.

Now, it is true that under the Dawes Commission a number of searches were made for these Indians throughout the State of Mississippi. Many of them were hard to find. A great many of them got to the State of Oklahoma too late, as I have been informed, to make and file their claims for this land. Now, this amendment is solely for the purpose of enabling an ignorant ward of the Government to file his claim as a Choctaw, and to all the rights of a Choctaw, so that he may not be deprived of his rights by reason of the fact that he has been ignorant and has been unable to comply with all the requirements of law. Therefore I think that all consideration ought to be shown and extended to these Indians. I sincerely trust the chairman of the committee will permit the amendment to be passed.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important subject, and would open up the whole question, so far as that tribe of Indians is concerned. It would open up the rolls. For the information of gentlemen, I will say that there is pending in the Committee on Indian Affairs at the present time a number of bills on this subject. It is the intention at a very early day, I will say to my friend from Mississippi, to take up and consider these bills, and this not being the proper place for this to now come up, I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The last clause of the oft-quoted Rule XXI provides:

> Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

The amendment offered clearly changes existing law and makes new law. Therefore it is not in order under the rule. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this item we have just passed is the last item wherein there are anything like lump-sum proposition. I wish to submit a few remarks upon the subject of grouping appropriations.

Mr. Chairman, gentlemen appear to be concerned because the committee that prepared this bill saw fit—and by absolute unanimity—to group certain items heretofore appropriated for separately. They term this a "new departure," a violation of both the law of Congress and the traditions of the House. Let us examine this matter for a moment to see how much of truth and fact it contains.

An examination of the appropriation acts made by the last Congress, bills that had the support of gentlemen now criticising the arrangement of the bill under consideration, contained lump-sum appropriations that in the scope of their purpose and magnitude of their sums so far eclipse the propositions in this bill as to make the aggregate sum of all such items herein appear absolutely ridiculous by comparison. Here are some of the lump-sum appropriations that passed the House without a murmur of disapproval less than one year ago:

The Department of Agriculture was given $625,000 for objects ranging from the eradication of scabies in sheep and cattle to the execution of the twenty-eight-hour law.

Here is a "lump sum" of $600,000—

> To be expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, telephone lines, cabins, fences, and other permanent improvements necessary for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests.

The same department had a "lump-sum" appropriation of $317,960 for the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of seeds, bulbs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the purchase of office fixtures and supplies, fuel, paper, twine, gum, postal cards, gas, electric current, official traveling expenses, and the employment of special agents, clerks, and other employees.

The same department had a "lump-sum" appropriation for the Forest Service of $3,986,000 to cover a range of subjects as wide as the country is large.

This same department had an appropriation of $200,000 for the Bureau of Chemistry, to be expended practically in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture within the District of Columbia, and the sum of $266,460 to be expended outside of the city of Washington. A total of $466,460 to be expended within the discretion of the head of the department to carry out provisions of existing law.

The same department had an appropriation of $300,000 for the prevention of the spread of moths, limited only by the variety of the moth, to wit, the gipsy and the browntail, which included the payment of rent and the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere and "all other necessary expenses."

The military establishment received an appropriation of $425,000 for the expenses of encampment and maneuvers of the organized militia authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in such encampments.

Upward of $7,000,000 was appropriated—

> To be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and accounted for as "subsistence of the army," and for that purpose to constitute one fund.

An appropriation of $1,500,000 was made—

> To be expended as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary for the construction and enlargement of barracks and quarters for the Coast Artillery and of other buildings in connection with the adopted project of seacoast defenses.

The Quartermaster's Department received a "lump-sum" appropriation of $9,300,000, to be expended for all necessary purposes, with the single limitation that it should not, under certain circumstances, be used in the payment for printing.

A "lump sum" of $800,000 was appropriated, to be expended by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the compensation of employees, without limit as to number or salary, and such articles and supplies as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary and especially order or approve for the office of the Supervising Architect, and for contingencies of every kind and character, including the compensation and expenses of judges to select plans, and care of sites acquired for public buildings, commission to architects, traveling expenses of site agents, telephone service, and other incidental expenses not enumerated.

An appropriation of $1,450,000 in a "lump sum" was made for fuel, lights, and water for public buildings, limited only to "such buildings completed and occupied as may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury."

The State Department had an appropriation of $325,000 for contingent expenses of foreign missions. It had an appropriation of $525,000 for contingent expenses of United States consulates, and as late as August 5, 1909, Congress gave the Secretary of State $100,000 in a "lump sum" for defraying the expenses incurred in connection with foreign trade relations within the jurisdiction of the Department of State. Practically $75,000 of this amount has been apportioned for the compensation of persons in the District of Columbia.

The Post-Office Department received an appropriation for rent, light, and fuel for first, second, and third class post-offices of $3,975,000, with the sole limitation that no sum in excess of $500 should be paid for rent of any third-class post-office.

The same department was given $700,000 for allowance of third-class post-offices to cover the cost of clerical service, with certain maximum limitations.

The Interstate Commerce Commission was given a "lump-sum" appropriation of $800,000, with specific limitation on only $54,500 of that amount.

The same service was given an appropriation of $350,000 to be used in the discretion of the commission to enforce compliance with section 20 of the act to regulate commerce, as amended by the act of June 29, 1906.

A "lump sum" of $1,000,000 was appropriated to be used in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to meet the expenses of protecting timber on the public lands and protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry, and so forth.

A "lump-sum" appropriation of $963,800 was appropriated for the expenses of light-vessels.

A "lump-sum" appropriation of $726,000 was made for supplies of light-houses.

A "lump-sum" appropriation of $950,000 was made for repairs on light-houses.

A "lump-sum" appropriation of $926,000 was made for the expenses of buoyage.

A "lump sum" of $2,400,000 was appropriated for the expenses of regulating immigration, and it was specifically provided that it was "all to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor."

Mr. Chairman, I could weary the House, if I have not already done so, by a citation of the acts in previous Congresses making "lump-sum" appropriations for all kinds of public service. I have not mentioned the many millions appropriated in "lump sums" for the construction of the Isthmian Canal or the maintenance of the departments of administration on the Canal Zone. Nor have I referred to the revolving millions in the reclamation fund subject to be used by the Secretary of the Interior quite within his discretion so long as expenditures are applied to the broad purpose of reclaiming arid lands. The act specifically provides that the Secretary of the Interior—

Is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts necessary and proper—

Of which he is to be the judge—for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect.

Mr. Chairman, this vast "lump sum" that will ultimately be so large as to dwarf the cost of the Isthmian Canal may be used by the Secretary of the Interior without limitation except as to its general purpose. From it he may construct and operate railroads, build telephone lines and power plants; from it he may and does erect manufacturing plants, conduct mercantile enterprises, and operate boarding houses. He may and does plat town sites and build villages, lease cottages, purchase irrigation systems, buy lands held in private ownership or acquire them by condemnation proceedings.

Under authority of law enacted by Congress in recent years he may do anything within the broad range of human industry, if in his judgment it be "necessary and proper" to give "full force and effect" to the power with which he is clothed. And yet, in the face of this law and other and numerous acts, a few only of which I have cited, gentlemen rise here to contend that it is contrary to public policy for this committee to report a bill carrying in one item an appropriation for the payment of stockmen, farmers, and matrons.

I have certainly made a sufficient enumeration to show that the position of gentlemen who have criticised the arrangement and grouping of appropriations in this bill is not justified by precedents, and I am prepared to show that their criticisms are not in the interest of either economy or good administration.

These acts that I have recited are recent acts, and they are supported by a consistent record of former Congresses. I appreciate the force of the contention of gentlemen who are reasonable in their efforts to place limitations on the use of public moneys; but "lump-sum" appropriations are not an innovation. In many instances they are an absolute necessity, and under safe and sane administrators they are conducive to economy. I do not advocate the policy except when there is special reason for it and when it is conducive both to economy and good administration, but from time immemorial Congress has recognized its necessity, and in recent years there has been a tendency—and I am simply stating a fact, not undertaking now to discuss its merits—to revert to it more and more. I repeat, the policy is not new. it is not a departure from custom to group objects of appropriations as this bill does.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us examine some of the statutes embodied in existing law and see if there is anything in this bill not in harmony with both the law and precedents. The other day I invited attention to the fact that the last Indian appropriation act contained 16 different items of appropriations, which by still another paragraph in the same act were authorized to be consolidated absolutely in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. I refer to the 16 different appropriations for incidentals and this paragraph authorizing their consolidation:

That any moneys appropriated in this act for the general incidental expenses of the Indian Service in certain States and Territories, including traveling expenses of agents, which are not needed in the particular States or Territories for which provided, may be used for the same kind of expenses elsewhere, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

I also cited another provision of existing law, as follows:

That hereafter when not required for the purpose for which appropriated, the funds provided for the pay of specified employees at any Indian agency may be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the pay of other employees at such agency, but no deficiency shall be thereby created; and, when necessary, specified employees may be detailed for other service when not required for the duty for which they were engaged; and that the several appropriations made for millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, physicians, and other persons, and for various articles provided for by treaty stipulation for the several Indian tribes may be diverted to other uses for the benefit of said tribes, respectively, within the discretion of the President, and that he cause report to be made to Congress, at its next session thereafter, of his action under this provision.

I now invite the attention of gentlemen to this provision of law found in the act of June 7, 1897 (30 Stat., 93):

That hereafter, where funds appropriated in specific terms for a particular object are not sufficient for the object named, any other appropriation, general in its terms, which otherwise would be available, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be used to accomplish the object for which the specific appropriation was made.

Unusual legislation? Certainly; but it is existing law and vitally affects the subject under consideration.

I apprehend, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen who have appeared to be shocked because the committee has undertaken in this bill to give direct effect to existing law instead of wasting time and expense in doing something that can be immediately and legally undone by executive order have not considered all the statutes applicable to the situation.

It is true that there is some grouping of items in this bill that may not be grouped by executive order. The few instances of that kind, however, can be shown conclusively to be in the interest of economy as well as good administration. Here is a provision of existing law which the gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] could not have had in mind the other day when they disputed me in my statement that it was necessary to group appropriations for stockmen, foresters, farmers, and so forth, to make it possible to employ the same men to do all of these kinds of work. This is the existing law:

SEC. 3678, Revised Statutes. All sums appropriated for the various branches of expenditure in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made and for no others.

Would it be economy, Mr. Chairman, for a farmer, ordinarily, to hire one hand to split rails exclusively; another to herd and care for the live stock and do nothing else; another to plant, cultivate, and garner the crops and nothing else; and still another to be engaged exclusively in the supervision of the work of the other three, when, perhaps, two men could do all of the work? That is precisely in point with what the act just cited requires of the Indian Service unless its stockmen, farmers, and foresters shall be appropriated for as it is provided in this bill. All of these several classes of service must be performed, and in many instances they can be most advantageously and most economically performed by a less number of employees than will be required under separate appropriations. That is impracticable, Mr. Chairman, under existing law or under this bill if it shall be framed according to the notions of the gentlemen who, with due deference to their intelligence and good motives, have not, I believe, given this subject thoughtful consideration in the light of all the facts, the administrative needs, and the details of practical service.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not permit myself or the committee that reported this bill to be put on the defensive in the matter of its arrangement. They have dealt with the subjects involved with great care, they have worked it out with careful consideration and with intelligent and conscientious industry. They have violated neither law nor precedent in its arrangement, and they have presented a bill which, if enacted into law in its present form, will produce important economies in expenditure, simplify accounting to a degree that will effect still further economies which have not been taken into consideration by its critics, and will be conducive to good administration in a manner that hitherto has been impossible.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," line 3, page 27, insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to immediately dispose of the lands and other tribal property of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, and to disburse per capita the proceeds thereof and all other tribal funds."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the gentleman to withhold the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will withhold it for five minutes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I realize that a point of order can be enforced against this amendment, for it is a sweeping legislative provision, and I do not indulge any vain hopes that the gentleman from South Dakota will fail to insist on his point of order when I have finished my remarks. On the contrary, I have offered this amendment only for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to a matter that was brought out in the discussion a few moments ago between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] over the point of order against the paragraph which we now have under consideration.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] seemed to be seeking information as to when the Federal Government would cease spending money in Oklahoma; as to when the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes would be wound up, and I want to assure the gentleman that more than 80,000 Indians in Oklahoma, more anxiously than he, await the answer to this important question. The gentleman made it plain that year after year this appropriation was made with the limitation that the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes would be wound up within twelve months after the then current fiscal year.

The gentleman from Illinois, as usual, is correct as to his statement of facts, but there is one patent and sufficient reason why these affairs have not been wound up—why this appropriation is continued in the bill. This reason is fully set forth by my short amendment.

The affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes have not been concluded because the executive branch of our Government did not have the authority of law with which to conclude them. These affairs can not be concluded until some legislation is passed, as proposed by this amendment, and it is buncombe and balderdash to continue this requirement for the winding up of the tribal affairs and in the next breath refuse to give authority to the proper officials to make the final disposition of same.

In 1892, I think it was, Congress passed a law creating what was known as the "Dawes Commission," whose duties were defined by the act in substance as follows: To treat with the Indians with a view to relinquishing their tribal autonomy and community ownership of land, taking in place therefor allotment of lands in severalty and United States citizenship.

In 1893 this commission was appointed and proceeded with its work, and on April 23, 1897, an agreement was effected with the Choctaw and Chickasaw, all other authorities of the Five Civilized Tribes following suit shortly thereafter.

In this treaty it was set forth, among other things, that the tribal rolls should be made, the lands allotted, all unallotted lands and other property of the tribes, save the segregated mineral land, to be sold as soon as allotment was completed, all tribal funds disbursed per capita to tribal citizens, and all tribal affairs finally concluded within eight years from the passage of the act. This would have continued the tribal governments in existence down to April, 1905. This agreement was known as the "Atoka agreement." It was approved by a majority vote of the entire tribe at a general election called for the purpose, and was ratified by Congress and placed on the statute books, bearing date of approval of June 28, 1898.

In 1902 another agreement was made, providing for a number of things never yet done, one of which was the sale of what is known as the "segregated mineral land" in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations. These agreements would have effectually disposed of the affairs of these tribes, and Congress would long ago have been rid of the much-vexed Indian question so far as the majority of the Five Civilized Tribes are concerned had it not been for the interference of Congress itself by the passage of the act of April 26, 1906.

This act, for some unknown reason, without the consent of the Indians and in violation of the sacred agreement made with them by the Federal Government, withdrew the segregated mineral land from sale, and in numerous other ways tied up the settlement of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes so that now there can be no disposition whatever of these affairs until Congress gives to the Secretary of the Interior the power and authority to dispose of them. The Secretary of the Interior is not to blame; the President is not to blame; the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is not to blame; the Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes is not to blame for the delay in winding up these matters. How on earth are they going to wind them up until you give them power and authority to wind them up?

Why, ever since the Oklahoma delegation has been in Congress I have been presenting bills at this end of the Capitol, and Senator OWEN has been presenting bills at the other end of the Capitol for the disposition of these affairs. We have done our uttermost to get consideration and favorable report on these measures. During the last session of the Sixtieth Congress our delegation and the Secretary of the Interior came to an agreement on a bill which would effectually enable these affairs to be wound up within about two and one-half years at the most.

The Secretary recommended this bill to Congress, and if it had passed then, Mr. Chairman, the settlement of these affairs would already have been more than twelve months on the way, and we would only have to appropriate the major portion of this money for about eighteen months in the future. After this year we would only have a six months' appropriation to make. As it is now, the appropriation must continue, and continue, and continue until the proper authorities are given some power to make a final disposition of these matters. So, I repeat, it is folderol and fustian to continue this opéra bouffe of making provision for the impossible.

I have not introduced a bill on this subject in the present session of Congress for the reason that some of the Republican leaders in my State said such bills were not considered last year for the reason that they were introduced by a Democrat. These bills for the settlement of tribal affairs have been introduced by Democrats in the past simply because no Republican in our delegation could be induced to father them. No bill has been introduced by a Democrat this year. The Democrats in the Oklahoma delegation stand ready and willing at all times to support any reasonable measure for the speedy settlement of tribal affairs and final distribution of tribal funds per capita to every Indian on the rolls, no matter whether introduced by Democrat, Republican, Socialist, or what not.

There is a bill now before the Indian Committee, H. R. 18375, introduced by the gentleman from the third Oklahoma district [Mr. CREAGER]. A committee from our delegation is now trying to whip this bill into shape. As soon as that is done we will go before the Secretary of the Interior and, if possible, come to an agreement with him on the measure. Then I will again attempt to impress upon this House the importance of one of two things—the necessity for either the passage of this bill or the establishment of a permanent bureau on the east side of the State of Oklahoma, which must necessarily last forever and eternally, and this appropriation continue until doomsday.

Let us deal frankly with this matter, and if we have any well-defined ideas on the subject, let us announce same candidly as our public policy and quit playing horse with the settlement of Indian affairs.

It is useless to talk about dispensing with the expenditure of this large amount of money in Oklahoma until you give authority for the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes to be finally wound up. These affairs are there, and they are Indian affairs because the affairs are the property of the Indians. The property is under the supervision of the Federal Government and must be cared for. If it is not properly cared for, if the property is allowed to go to rack and depreciate in value, if it is allowed to pass into the possession of other parties, then this Government is liable to have a suit on its hands, and I, for one, shall be for the suit under these conditions.

Mr. Chairman, it has now been almost thirteen years since these Indians agreed to take their lands in severalty and to have their affairs wound up in eight years, and I want to state right here that had it not been for the provision in the Atoka agreement to the effect that these affairs would be terminated, the property sold and money divided within eight years, that Atoka agreement would not now be on the statute books of the United States with the consent of the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

In the face of your sacred obligation with these helpless wards of the Government you have refused, by legislative enactment, to dispose of their affairs and pay them their money. How long, Mr. Chairman, is this to continue? How long will the Federal Government consent to remain in the attitude as repudiators of a sacred obligation with a helpless and confiding ward? If these Indians could only get into court I do not think it would take very long for them to get justice and have their affairs finally settled, but unfortunately in this instance neither party to this transaction can sue or be sued.

This Congress, in its refusal to deal with this matter in a frank and candid manner, by failing to direct and authorize the disposition of these affairs, in accordance with a sacred obligation, is guilty of a gross and willful dereliction of duty. I have pointed out this neglect of duty and will have more to say on this matter in the future.

Remember, gentlemen of the committee, more than 80,000 Indians in eastern Oklahoma are anxiously awaiting your action in this matter. Remember that the pledge of the United States Government is given that these matters shall be settled at the earliest possible moment. Remember that this pledge is already long delayed and broken. It but remains with you gentlemen of the House to keep the plighted faith of this great and powerful Government with a small and helpless band of its citizens.

There is just one other fact to which I want to call the attention of this House, if the Chair will permit, and that is that there is now being expended out of the tribal funds of the Five Civilized Tribes, I think, something over $500,000 annually, concerning which expenditure no report is required by any man to any man. Under the law this expenditure is directed to be done under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, and he is accountable to and reports only to himself. This is no reflection upon the Secretary or any of his subordinates. It is no reflection on the integrity of any man to ask him to make an accounting of trust funds administered by him. This kind of supervision simply tends to make any class of public officials better and more accurate in their dispensation of such matters. Congress would not think of permitting the funds from the National Treasury to be expended in any such loose, haphazard manner as this. Why should we require any more rigid supervision of our own funds than those held in trust for our wards?

In response to a resolution passed by the first session of the Sixtieth Congress a report was made, some ten months thereafter, on the administration of these funds, and that is the last that has ever been heard from them.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will permit, I will say to him that when this appropriation bill becomes a law the Secretary of the Interior will report henceforth on all of these items.

Mr. CARTER. I am very glad to hear the gentleman say that. I know that I talked to him about the matter on several different occasions, and he agreed with me that this should be done. In the reading of the bill we have not yet reached that provision.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. We have a provision in the bill under which we propose to have a report to Congress.

Mr. CARTER. I think that is one of the best provisions in the bill, because it places this matter on a more businesslike basis. Under the nose of each member of the Indian Committee every year will be stuck a statement of the vast amount of Indian funds that are being expended in eastern Oklahoma. Some of these expenditures are not only not beneficial, but are notoriously detrimental to the Indian, in my opinion, and I am sure if either the Interior Department officials or the members of the Five Civilized Tribes had a free hand some of these items would be summarily dealt with. This is a good provision, Mr. Chairman, but it just goes half far enough. There is no sane, logical reason why these funds should not be dealt with just the same as the funds in the Federal Treasury. None of this money should be spent without a specific appropriation by Congress, and if the point of order would not lie against it I would offer some such amendment as this:

That hereafter no money shall be expended from the funds of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma except by specific congressional action: Provided, This inhibition shall not interefere with or prevent the distribution of all these funds per capita to legally enrolled members as the law directs.

Mr. Chairman, let us give the Indian a dead-square deal; let us deal with him without duplicity, double dealing, or sophistry; and let us divide the tribal property among these Five Civilized Tribes at the earliest possible moment. The majority of them are competent. Let us pay them off and grant to them all the immunities and privileges you yourself enjoy. Let Congress closely scrutinize and supervise the administration of these Indian funds until the final settlement is made, and I again wish to guarantee that members of these Five Civilized Tribes will make good as citizens of this great Republic.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and expenses of district agents for the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma and other employees connected with the work of such agents, $90,000.

Mr. CREAGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, page 27, strike out the word "ninety" and insert the words "one hundred and five," so that it will read "$105,000."

Mr. CREAGER. Mr. Chairman, the work of the district agents among the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes is, I believe, the wisest and best that has been undertaken by Congress in recent years. These men have saved to the Government and to the Indians a great many thousands of dollars. They are saving more money every day by hastening the time when the work for the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes will cease, because the principal part of their duty is to listen to applications for the removal of restrictions.

Shortly after Congress authorized the appointment of these agents an authorization was made for the appointment of additional district agents in that part of Oklahoma not included in the territory of the Five Civilized Tribes. Unfortunately sufficient appropriation was not made to meet all the expenses, with the result that the work among the district agents for the Five Civilized Tribes was seriously impaired and the appropriation is now exhausted. We ask, therefore, for $15,000 additional, in order that expenses for the next year may be met, and that the work which has been impaired may be caught up with and go on as originally intended by Congress.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CREAGER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has any part of this fund been used for bringing suit against persons down there?

Mr. CREAGER. No.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware that 20,000 suits have been brought against people in Oklahoma who have bought Indian lands, and that it has greatly injured that country and injured the Indian, because it depreciates the value of Indian land? The government agents have been very derelict in their duty by bringing so many of these unfounded suits.

I will cite the case of Mr. Cruce, who was candidate for governor in the last election, and who married an Indian woman, and was the legal guardian of the wife and children, to whom lands and town lots had been awarded. Mr. Cruce sold some of this property, and the deeds made by him were attacked by these agents of the Government and suits brought to recover the property. These suits were brought to cancel these deeds at the instance of and by the men who brought these 20,000 suits, and it seems to me that there must have been behind it some men holding office under the Federal Government who were deriving benefits in court fees to which they were not justly entitled. I do not think that we ought to appropriate money to aid these men to bring more suits, to the injury of the people of Oklahoma and the Indians as well.

Mr. CREAGER. The district agents had no more to do with the bringing of this litigation than did the gentleman from Texas.

[The time of Mr. CREAGER having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Who did bring the suits and who authorized them? I have been met with the same answer the gentleman makes every time I have tried to find out anything about these suits.

Mr. CREAGER. It is true that the value of the Indian property in Oklahoma is being depreciated partly by this litigation, which I believe personally is unnecessary, and largely because the Democratic administration of that State makes it an industrial scarecrow rather than a sensible, progressive state government.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CREAGER. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What authority has the State to authorize the bringing of these suits?

Mr. CREAGER. The State did not authorize the bringing of the suits; it had nothing to do with it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They were brought by the agents of the Federal Government?

Mr. CREAGER. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then how did the state government become responsible?

Mr. CREAGER. The state government is not responsible for the suits, but they are responsible for a tax rate that is unbearable.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware that the judges before whom the cases were tried and the men bringing the suits were Republicans and not Democrats?

Mr. CREAGER. No; I am not aware of the fact. The man superintending the suits was a Democrat, and that is the meanest thing I have heard said of him. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Who appointed him?

Mr. CREAGER. The man who did appoint him is not within the jurisdiction of the United States at this time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman says he was a Democrat; what did he do?

Mr. CREAGER. Who?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman who brought the suits.

Mr. CREAGER. Why, he brought the suits. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As attorney for the United States Government?

Mr. CREAGER. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Against the Indians?

Mr. CREAGER. No.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, the gentleman says he is responsible?

Mr. CREAGER. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not prevail. I will say that the committee considered the subject carefully, and while it is true that there has been a deficit heretofore, the commissioner assured us that it would not be necessary to expend as much money on the west side as has heretofore been expended there, and therefore the proposed appropriation will be sufficient to take care of the matter that the gentleman from Oklahoma has in mind when he proposes to increase this appropriation. The committee believe that the amount stated in the bill will be sufficient to accomplish all that is necessary to be done and pay the expenses of the district agents, so I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is directed to pay Arthur P. Murphy out of the funds of the Muskogee (Creek) tribe of Indians the sum of $4,320.08, in full payment for amount due him as attorney for said tribe of Indians under contract dated January 10, 1903, and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior January 13, 1903.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point of order against this section. I would like to know what steps were taken in the courts to secure this fee, and by what authority of law the applicant comes to this Congress.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that this item concerns a Member of the House, [Mr. MURPHY], and he is, of course, familiar with the subject. I therefore ask him to answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I doubt if the provision is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It does not propose to take any money from the Treasury. It proposes to pay this claim from the funds of the Indians, and my understanding is that there is now authority of law by which we may appropriate moneys belonging to these Indians for any purpose for their benefit.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose, of course, that the gentleman would insist that it makes any difference whose money is being paid, as far as the principle involved is concerned, because the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I take it, would safeguard the money of the Indians just as much as he would the money of the United States Treasury.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would say it makes this difference: If we did have authority of law to pay out for the Indians from their own funds moneys that we think ought to be paid, it is quite a different proposition than to pay money generally from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SISSON. I think the gentleman misunderstands me. I did not undertake to say that the exact rule would be the same in both cases, but the care exercised by the committee ought to be the same to safeguard the funds of each.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Oh, exactly the same. I would not consent to report in favor of an appropriation to pay the claim of any person that I did not believe was an honest one, from the funds of the Indians any sooner than I would from the general fund in the Treasury.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, Mr. MURPHY may be entitled to this fee, but I would like to know something about the services rendered and by whom he was employed, and whether or not any suit has been brought in any court for the purpose of recovering this fee, and, if he has gone into the courts, whether or not the courts had any jurisdiction to allow him his fee, and the character of litigation.

If he was authorized to be employed to bring suits there ought to have been at the time he was employed some provision to pay his fees, and if the power that authorized the employment had declined to pay the fee, then there is evidently some reason for it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will again call upon the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Chairman, to give the gentleman from Mississippi this information. The committee were unanimous in the belief that this ought to be paid. The department also advised the committee that it believed it was a just claim and ought to be settled.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I hesitate somewhat to defend an appropriation in which I am personally interested, and would not do so unless requested. The first Creek treaty—and I believe the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] has it before him—provided that any bill passed by the Creek council—which is their legislature—except appropriations for the pay of their officers, and I was not an officer, should be approved by the President of the United States before it could have any effect. On December 6, 1901, the council of the Muskogee or Creek Nation passed an act which provided for the employment of an attorney, or a firm of attorneys, specifically defining their duties. Among other things, it provided that "the compensation of said attorney at law, or firm of attorneys at law, shall be $5,000 per annum, to be paid from the general funds of the Muskogee Nation." In December, 1902, that act was approved by the President of the United States.

On January 10, 1903, I entered into a contract with the Creek Nation, through its principal chief, as authorized by that act, in which it is incorporated and in which the duties are enumerated as provided therein, providing for the pay as was also provided. I entered upon those duties—in fact, some time prior—a month or two before the time—a prior contract having been made but not acknowledged, as required by the general statutes of the United States; I continued in the work until March 24, 1904. Some time in the month of February, 1904, one Mr. Bonaparte and Woodruff went to the Indian Territory to make an investigation of the Dawes Commission and other officials of the Government in that country. I had previously preferred some charges against government officials in that country, and he was given those charges to investigate. Mr. Bonaparte spent some three days making that investigation and made a report, which was published as a public document, in which some discreditable things were said about myself, and the officials I complained about were given a clean bill of health; and he also sought to discredit the so-called "Dawes Commission" in his report. At that time I was investigating the town-lot frauds. I did not know at that time that he who was a party to my contract was a participant in those frauds. But it was brought to the attention of the Secretary of the Interior. Pursuant to Mr. Bonaparte's report, on March 24, 1904, the principal chief of the Creek Nation attempted to terminate my contract, stating as the only reason for doing so that Mr. Bonaparte had said certain things in relation to me. I neglected to state that the officials complained against at that time are not now in the service of the Government, but one of them was found to be $7,000 short in his accounts. I immediately notified the chief of the Creek Nation in reply to his notice to me that I did not recognize his authority to terminate the contract except for a good cause, and that should be a cause which the courts would determine to be a good cause.

But he persisted in it, and I maintained my office there out of my own pocket, and remained there until July, 1905, although I had been elected to Congress in the meantime; but I abandoned my claim for any pay after March 4, 1905, when my salary as a Member of Congress began. I brought a suit, injunction proceedings, in the federal court of Muskogee to restrain the principal chief from paying this amount to anyone else, and asked for a mandatory injunction to compel him to pay it to me. After the suit had been instituted the then principal chief and I entered into an agreement that the court should determine that cause, without reference to any technicalities, and decide who was entitled to the money. The case was then referred to a master in chancery, and he found I was entitled to $4,320.08. It was taken up to the United States court, and the report of the master was approved and judgment rendered. The case was appealed to the United States court of appeals for the Indian Territory and there submitted. No claim was raised at that time that it was a suit against the Creek Nation, but it was submitted solely and wholly on its merits as to whether I was entitled to the money or not. By a unanimous decision the court decided I was entitled to $4,320.08. Subsequently, or very shortly thereafter, the principal chief died. His successor and a gentleman who had been appointed attorney for the Creek Nation on a contract copied from this of mine repudiated that agreement and appealed the case to the United States circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit. They pressed it very strongly and tried to have it decided that I was an officer and that the court could not control the acts of an executive officer. The United States circuit court of appeals decided in the first paragraph of their decision—I have it here, and it is quite lengthy—that I was not an officer; that in no way could it be construed that a man performing services under a contract where the act provided for an attorney or a firm of attorneys that they could be officers, and that I was not an officer; but did decide that it was a suit virtually against the Creek Nation; that the question could be raised at any stage of the proceedings; and, therefore, the suit could not be maintained. That is the history of the litigation. Of course, having this provision in the bill, should it be retained, I must withhold my vote on the bill.

Mr. SISSON. They held, as I understand it, that you could not maintain the suit against the Creek Nation, because it was a sovereignty? Is that the idea?

Mr. MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Mr. SISSON. But the court decided on the merits of the controversy that you were entitled——

Mr. MURPHY. That I was entitled to the money. It was the unanimous decision of the United States court of appeals for the Indian Territory.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to have the gentleman state how much he has expended in litigation over this matter?

Mr. MURPHY. I paid out at one time, after the suit was dismissed, $1,535 on the injunction bond.

Mr. SISSON. I do not care to go further into the proposition. I only wanted to know whether the matter had been adjudicated by the court on its merits, and, under all the circumstances, even if the point of order would lie against it, I would withdraw it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of Confederated Bands of Utes in Utah: For pay of 2 carpenters, 2 millers, 2 farmers, and 2 blacksmiths (art. 15, treaty of Mar. 2, 1868), $6,720; for pay of 2 teachers (same article and treaty), $1,800; for purchase of iron and steel and the necessary tools for blacksmith shop (art. 9, same treaty), $220; for annua. amount for the purchase of beef, mutton, wheat, flour, beans, and potatoes, or other necessary articles of food (art. 12, same treaty), $30,000; for pay of employees at the several Ute agencies, $15,000; in all, $53,740.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk and which has been approved by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph, after the word "dollars," in line 33:

"For straightening the Duchesne River within the limits of the town site of Duchesne, now Theodore, in the State of Utah, the sum of $5,000, to be immediately available, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and to be reimbursable out of the proceeds of the sales of lots within said town site under the act of May 27, 1902 (32 Stats., 245)."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will have to reserve a point of order against the amendment, because it is not as reported by the committee, if I understood the reading of it.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. I think the gentleman is mistaken. The amendment is drawn exactly in the language which was submitted by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. We are taking the opinion of the committee and not that of the Secretary of the Interior. I have an amendment here which accomplishes the same thing.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. I have no objection to the amendment. I have no pride of construction, provided the purpose is accomplished.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then the gentleman may offer it as a substitute.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment which I submitted and desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk as a substitute.

Mr. Chairman, this appropriation has the indorsement of the Secretary of the Interior, after a careful and full investigation of the matter. It simply enables the Secretary to employ the sum appropriated from the Indian funds in protecting from overflow the unsold lots in the Theodore town site which belong to the Indians. The money expended will enhance the value of these lots and make them more desirable for prospective purchasers. The improvement is necessary and is in the interest of the town site.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following paragraph:

"For straightening the Duchesne River within the limits of the town site of Duchesne, now Theodore, in the State of Utah, $5,000, to be immediately available and to be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of land within the Uinta Reservation, open to entry under the act of May 27, 1902, and including the sale of lots within said town site of Theodore."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. For the support and education of 120 Indian pupils at the school of Hampton, Va., $20,040.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The Indians of Alaska long heard of the high reputation of Hampton for its educational facilities, and many of them may desire to go there. On Saturday when the matter of the Indian appropriation bill was being heard I was unfortunately absent attending a hearing before the Senate committee on the Alaska legislation bill. I learned that the status of the Indians of Alaska was questioned as to whether they had a right to be classed as Indians and whether they had a right to have a portion of the appropriation for the suppression of the liquor traffic extended to their protection or not. I think a mistake was made in that respect, and for the purpose of attempting to correct it I ask unanimous consent to show, if I can, that the Indians of Alaska have the same legal status before the law as do the Indians of New Mexico and Arizona.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask whether or not you are acquainted with a tribe of Indians that Doctor Duncan has on the Annette Island?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I am.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If you will look back, you will find that he appeared before the committee, and there was some legislation recognizing those as Indians. Is Doctor Duncan and those Indians still on the islands?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes, sir; but that was a tribe of Indians that came into Alaska from British Columbia, and an act of Congress was necessary to give them the rights of Indians in Alaska.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Now, is it a fact that these were recognized as Indians?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Oh, no; not until the act of Congress gave them that status.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Metlakahtla Indians?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think it was the Metlakahtla Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that the Aleut Indians are some of the very original people of Alaska?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The Aleuts are a branch of the Eskimo and reside on the Aleutian Islands and along the south coast of the Alaska peninsula.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But they were undoubtedly Indians?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Oh, I think so. The Indians who inhabit the interior of Alaska are identical with the Apaches and Navajo. They talk the same language that the Apaches and Navajo in New Mexico and Arizona speak, with only dialectic differences.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. So it would be rather dangerous to bring those people from Alaska to Hampton and educate them?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It might be dangerous for some of them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would it not be dangerous for the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Not at all; we have schools for them in Alaska.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How many of these Indians are there in Alaska?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. About 30,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We would have to have a great many more schools, then, for them.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Not at all.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It would be beyond the capacity of all of the nonreservation schools, and I believe that we ought to do away with all but the reservation schools.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. We do not want any Indian agents in Alaska; we do not want the Government to create reservations and move them thereon and attempt to control them by appointing agents over them. We want it to give them aid and assistance by furnishing them physicians and suppressing the liquor traffic among them, however.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think you are exactly right, and I think Congress ought to give you the necessary legislation.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, on Saturday, when the House was engaged in the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, I was unavoidably detained before the Senate Committee on Territories in a hearing on the bill providing for the creation of a legislative council in Alaska. Upon the consideration of that clause of the bill, "For the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians, $70,000," the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] offered an amendment, to add to the clause, after the word "Indian," the words "including those in the Territory of Alaska." A point of order was sustained to the amendment.

The final action taken by the committee in refusing to amend is quite satisfactory to me, but not for the reasons stated in support of the point of order. It is my judgment that the appropriation is applicable to Alaska and may be used for the suppression of the illegal traffic in intoxicating liquor among the Indians there without amendment.

The third article of the treaty of cession of 1867, by which the United States acquired the Territory of Alaska from Russia, provides:

ARTICLE III.

The inhabitants of the ceded territory, according to their choice, reserving their natural allegiance, may return to Russia within three years; but if they should prefer to remain in the ceded territory, they, with the exception of uncivilized native tribes, shall be admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States, and shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion. The uncivilized tribes will be subject to such laws and regulations as the United States may, from time to time, adopt in regard to aboriginal tribes of that country.

The last clause in that section guarantees to the uncivilized tribes in Alaska the benefit of such "laws and regulations as the United States may, from time to time, adopt in regard to aboriginal tribes of that country," meaning the United States. If that meaning of the words of the treaty—the supreme law of the land—may be adopted, as it has been adopted in the local courts in Alaska, then all those general laws passed by Congress and which are applicable for the control of Indians and of Indian affairs within the United States are in effect in Alaska. If that is correct, then the appropriation in general terms for "the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians" is sufficiently broad to enable it to be used in Alaska.

Even if these words of the treaty may be thought insufficient to extend that appropriation to Alaska, there is a general statute of the United States which certainly does effect that result. Section 1891 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides:

SEC. 1891. The Constitution and all laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within all the organized Territories, and in every Territory hereafter organized as elsewhere in the United States.

This statute extends not only the Constitution, but all the laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable to Alaska if Alaska is a Territory. That question is happily settled by several decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in causes where that identical point came in controversy. In the case of Steamer Coquitlam v. United States (163 U. S., 346) that court decided:

Alaska is one of the Territories of the United States. It was so designated in that order, and has always been so regarded. And the court established by the act of 1884 is the court of last resort within the limits of that Territory. It is, therefore, in every substantial sense the supreme court of that Territory. No reason can be suggested why a Territory of the United States, in which the court of last resort is called a "supreme court," should be assigned to some circuit established by Congress that does not apply with full force to the Territory of Alaska, in which the court of last resort is designated the "district court of Alaska."

In the case of Binns v. United States (194 U. S., 486), where the constitutionality of the license laws of Alaska was at issue, the court again said:

* * * Nor can it be doubted that it is an organized Territory, for the act of May 17, 1884 (23 Stat., 24), entitled "An act providing a civil government for Alaska," provided "that the territory ceded to the United States by Russia by the treaty of March 30, 1867, and known as Alaska, shall constitute a civil and judicial district, the government of which shall be organized and administered as hereinafter provided." (See also 31 Stat. L., 321, sec. 1.)

And in the case of Rasmussen v. United States (197 U. S., 516) the Coquitlam and Binns cases were referred to and approved, and the court again declared that "Alaska is one of the Territories of the United States."

It follows from the force of section 1891, Revised Statutes, 1878, and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States just cited, "that the Constitution and all laws of the United States not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect" in Alaska "as elsewhere in the United States." It necessarily follows, then, that a general appropriation "for the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians" applies to Alaska if there are any "Indians" in that Territory.

The point of order was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who said:

Mr. MANN. The point of order is that there is no authority of law for this appropriation so far as Alaska is concerned. There is an authority of law for appropriation so far as the Indian country is concerned, however.

Alaska was declared "Indian country," so far as the introduction and sale of spirituous liquors are concerned, by the act of Congress of March 3, 1873 (17 Stat., 530). The United States district court in Oregon, in construing the statute, declared:

Upon the extension of sections 20 and 21 of the Indian intercourse act of 1834 (4 Stat., 732) over the Territory of Alaska, by force of act March 3, 1873 (17 Stat., 530), said Territory became, so far as the introduction and distribution of spirituous liquors is concerned, what is known in the law as "Indian country," and therefore the military force of the United States may be employed therein for the arrest of persons who violate either of said sections. (In re Carr, 3 Sawyer, 316.)

Alaska is not "Indian country" in the technical sense of that phrase only so far as the introduction and disposition of spirituous liquors is concerned, and subject to this restraint it is open to occupation and trade generally. (Waters v. Campbell, 4 Sawyer, 121.)

Alaska is, therefore, so far as the sale of liquor to Indians is concerned, "Indian country," and for that reason the appropriation was, in the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], authorized and not subject to his point of order.

For the reason, however, that the Constitution and all general laws of the United States not locally inapplicable are extended to Alaska by section 1891, Revised Statutes, a general appropriation "for the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians" applies to Alaska if there are any "Indians" there. The census of 1900 showed that there are 29,356 Indians in Alaska. But, it was said, the Alaskan natives "are not Indians in the strict sense." Another gentleman declared, "I do not believe that the natives of Alaska are classed as Indians at all," and they were called "statutory Indians," to distinguish them from the real Indians in the United States.

These opinions are entirely at variance with the truly valuable and highly scientific conclusions announced by the Bureau of Ethnology. The pre-Columbian inhabitants of America were all one in blood. From the Arctic to the Antarctic, from Point Barrow to Terra del Fuego, the natives of the Americas were one race and one blood. Though tribes differed greatly in culture, ethnology has found no difference in blood; they constituted one great American family.

There are three general classes or types of Indians in Alaska. The Eskimo-Aleut type inhabits the seacoast from the mouth of the Copper River westward and northward along all the northern shores of that great territory. They are gentle and peaceable and long inhabited those shores in safety and comfort until the white man came to destroy them with his vices and whisky.

From the Copper River southward the Tlingit type, with its highly complex clan system and semicivilized culture, extended to Cape Flattery in the State of Washington. Just as the Makahs, Ozette, and other tribes in Washington were Indians of the most interesting type, so are those of southeastern Alaska. More than five-sixths of Alaska was inhabited, sparsely but solely, by the Tinneh or Athapascan type. This type extended from near the mouth of the Yukon across the entire width of Alaska, and thence entirely across the plains and valleys of British North America to Labrador. Bands of these hardy, northern rovers migrated southward, following the rivers, into Washington, and thence onward. A tribe in Washington, the Umpqua in Oregon, the Hupa in California, the Navahos and the dread Apache of the Mexican border are blood brothers of the Indians of the Tanana and Yukon in Alaska. There is no difference in the language and culture between the Tanana Indians of the Territory of Alaska and the Apache Indians of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico. Nor, in my opinion, is there the slightest difference in their legal status or legal rights, except that the Navaho-Apache of Alaska have the right guaranteed to them, under the treaty of cession of 1867, to the protection of "such laws and regulations as the United States may from time to time adopt in regard to" the Navaho and Apache of Arizona and New Mexico.

One of the rights thus guaranteed was that they should be protected during their early days of contact with the white man from his bad habits and worse whisky. Congress has passed various penal laws to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors to Indians in Alaska, and the courts of that Territory for many years have and do now enforce those laws, by fine and imprisonment, and it has never before been suggested that these people were not Indians. There is an imperative necessity for the prompt and stringent enforcement of these laws, and the appropriation for the suppression of the illegal traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians ought to be fairly divided with Alaska, that her Indians may be protected and encouraged to enter upon that long and hazardous trail which is supposed to lead to civilization.

In conclusion I wish to express the opinion that while the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] was quite unnecessary to extend the appropriation to Alaska, it was highly beneficial in suggesting that it is sometimes necessary to enact superfluous legislation to get into the heads of those charged with the administration of laws that the things thus expressed must be done. If the Indian Office would consider these questions in the light of the law, I am sure Alaskan Indians will have the benefit of a share of this appropriation from the mere suggestion of his amendment, for which I thank him.

However, I wish to express the opinion that the appointment of Indian agents and the enforced gathering of the Indians of Alaska upon reservations is unnecessary and ought never to be considered. If they can have the services of a physician and reasonable sanitary suggestions, and "the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among" them, they will need no more attention from the General Government, since they may now take lands under the provisions of the Indian severalty law, and may, by abandoning their tribal relations and adopting the habits of civilized life, become American citizens. What the Indians of Alaska need is a careful consideration of their legal rights and status before the law and protection from whisky and intrusion upon their old home places; then let them alone.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 27. As soon after the close of the present fiscal year as may be practicable and not later than the first Monday in December, 1910, the Secretary of the Interior shall transmit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives a statement of the fiscal affairs of all Indian tribes for whose benefit estimates of appropriations, except for the purpose of fulfilling treaty stipulations, to be paid from either public or tribal funds, will be made for the fiscal year 1912; and such statement shall show (1) the total amount of all moneys, except the unexpended balances of appropriations made for current and contingent expenses for Indian affairs for the fiscal year 1910, from whatever source derived, standing to the credit of each such tribe of Indians, in trust or otherwise, at the close of the present fiscal year; (2) an analysis of such credits, by funds, showing how and when they were created, whether by treaty stipulation, agreement, or otherwise; (3) the total amount of disbursements from public or trust funds made on account of each such tribe of Indians for the fiscal year 1910; and (4) an analysis of such disbursements showing the amounts disbursed (a) for per capita payments in money to Indians, (b) for salaries or compensation of officers and employees, (c) for compensation of counsel and attorney's fees, and (d) for support and civilization.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to correct the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 38, line 6, change the word "year" to "years;" and in line 7, after the word "ten," insert the words "and nineteen hundred and eleven."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 38, insert the following as section 28 of the bill:

"SEC. 28. The several agreements concluded with certain Indian tribes hereinafter mentioned, as evidenced by the original papers on file in the office of Indian Affairs and the copies thereof transmitted to Congress by the President and contained in Senate Document No. 358, Sixty-first Congress, second session, for the commutation of their perpetual annuities under treaty stipulations, made in pursuance of a provision of the act of April 30, 1908, authorizing the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, subject to the approval of Congress, to negotiate with any Indian tribe for the commutation of perpetual annuities due under treaty stipulations, are hereby ratified and confirmed, to wit:

"'The agreement with the Oneida tribe of Wisconsin, dated January 4, 1909;

"'The agreements with the Sac and Fox of the Mississippi tribe of Oklahoma and Iowa, dated February 27, 1909;

"'The agreement with the Pottawatomie tribe of Kansas and Wisconsin, dated March 16, 1909;'

"And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the said tribes, respectively, the sums hereinafter specified, said sums being a capitalization of the perpetual annuities of said tribes on the basis of 5 per cent, and the same having been accepted by said tribes in the agreements heretofore mentioned in lieu of and as a commutation of said perpetual annuities, to wit:

"'The Oneida tribe of Wisconsin, $20,000;

"'The Sac and Fox of the Mississippi tribe of Oklahoma and Iowa, $20,000;

"'The Potawatomie tribe of Kansas and Wisconsin, $180,758;'

"And the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to withdraw said funds from the Treasury for payment to said Indians, or expenditure for their benefit, at such times and in such manner as he may deem proper and under such regulations as he may prescribe.

"The sums placed to the credit of the respective tribes, less disbursements therefrom, as provided for herein, shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum; and the interest accruing on said principal sums may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be paid in cash to the Indians entitled thereto annually or semi-annually, or expended for their benefit in such manner and under such regulations as he may prescribe."

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This is the proposition that we discussed earlier in the day. The act of April 30, 1908, being the Indian appropriation act for that year, had this paragraph:

That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized to send a special Indian agent or other representative of his office to visit any Indian tribe for the purpose of negotiating and entering into a written agreement with such tribe for the commutation of the perpetual annuities due under treaty stipulations, to be subject to the approval of Congress; and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall transmit to Congress said agreements, with such recommendations as he may deem proper.

That has reference to perpetual annuities for which we make appropriations annually. It was thought that many of them could be gotten rid of by having them capitalized, so that the money might be paid out to the Indians.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under that authority and in compliance with it, has transmitted his report, which is embodied in Senate Document No. 358, Sixty-first Congress, second session, containing a number of agreements proposing to capitalize annuities. It is all upon a 5 per cent basis, and it involves, I think, about $200,000 to be set aside to the credit of the Indians, at a rate of 5 per cent interest for such time as it may remain to their credit; but the agreements provide that the money may be paid to them or expended for them, as the case may be. It is simply a business proposition, and as such it would seem to be advantageous to the Government.

I want to say, further, that in recent years we have capitalized a number of these annuity payments to the extent of paying out $2,000,000 or $3,000,000; I am not certain as to the exact amount.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman what is the total amount that is now deposited in the Treasury under this provision?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Under that bill?

Mr. MANN. Under the amendment offered by the gentleman.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think about $200,000.

Mr. MANN. It is in the neighborhood of $200,000?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think it is $220,758, to be accurate.

Mr. MANN. I know the gentleman intends to treat the House with perfect fairness, and yet it is very difficult for Members of the House to determine as to the merits of the details of a proposition of that sort. Is this proposition the same in detail and provision as the capitalizing propositions have been before?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Just the same.

Mr. MANN. What is the authority contained in this amendment for the paying out of the money, and how is it to be gotten out?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In accordance with the agreements made with the different tribes of Indians. It varies, I think——

Mr. MANN. These agreements are not set forth here. They are not ratified, are they?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They are to be ratified by the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. MANN. Without setting them forth?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They are printed in Senate Document No. 358, Sixty-first Congress, second session, and by reference to them in this amendment we ratify them.

Mr. MANN. Is that customary?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think so. That is following the precedents.

Mr. MANN. I think, usually, we have had those agreements set out in haec verba.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It has been done in both ways, Mr. Chairman. I think in matters of no greater importance than this it has not been customary to set them out; but where the agreement contains much of legislation, it is usually set out in full.

Mr. MANN. Why could not the department have transmitted this information to the committee in time for the committee to have reported the bill in the House covering this, so that Members of the House might have an opportunity to see it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The reports were made, I presume, as soon as they were completed and ready to submit. The department is still at work negotiating with other tribes of Indians to capitalize their funds, and in this report is one proposing to capitalize the fund of the Pawnee Indians in Oklahoma. It is quite a large proposition. It involves $600,000. We had some information to the effect that the agreement had been signed by some who perhaps ought not to have signed it, and there being a protest against its ratification we have not included that in this provision.

Had it not been for the fact that there was a protest from some of the Indians concerning that we would have included it with this other proposition. As I have already stated, it is a business proposition, pure and simple.

Mr. MANN. I want to ask the gentleman if the Secretary of the Interior can draw this money out without an appropriation?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think so. I think he may also segregate the money in the Treasury and open up an account with each individual Indian of the respective tribes mentioned in the document.

Mr. MANN. Here is the situation. We are now appropriating large sums of money for the support of the Indians on the ground that they have no means of support belonging to themselves. We appropriate money to certain other Indians under treaty arrangements. Here is a proposition to capitalize the appropriations covered by the treaty arrangement and then to permit the Secretary of the Interior without further authorization of Congress to pay over the principal of the capitalized amount to the Indians. Will not that be followed by a request for us to support these Indians after they have expended their money?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois that the Secretary of the Interior has that power to-day to pay out every dollar in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians when he concludes that they are competent and capable of managing their own affairs. He has also the authority to remove restrictions from allotments and grant a fee-simple patent.

Mr. MANN. Then, why do we carry in the bill that is under consideration an appropriation of $250,000 out of the Iowa and Comanche fund for the benefit of the Indians of Oklahoma?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The Secretary would not be permitted to pay out $250,000 to a tribe as a whole, but if a member of the tribe was to make application or request that he might withdraw his pro rata share, the Secretary of the Interior might grant his application and pay him his portion.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that the gentleman believes that, but I am afraid that the gentleman is mistaken. I do not think that the Secretary of the Interior has that authority.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I know to a certainty that it does apply to a number of trust funds belonging to Indian tribes.

Mr. MANN. It may apply to a number of trust funds belonging to Indian tribes; I know nothing about that. That would depend on the agreement entered into, but that has no application to this case. I do not believe that we ought to capitalize the annual amount now due to the Indians and then permit the Secretary of the Interior to expend the money at his will without appropriation by Congress, and then put us in the position where we will have to appropriate money annually and thus place us where we now are.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let me say that this capitalization applies in practically every instance to Indians who have reached such a state of civilization that there is no longer any occasion for the Government to continue its hand upon them. For instance, we have an item here in the bill now of $6,000 a year for Indians up in western New York. There is nobody that doubts for a moment but what those Indians would be entirely capable of taking care of the money that is coming to them, and that it would be safe to pay it to them.

Mr. MANN. As to the particular tribes of Indians, may I ask what the Oneidas, the Sacs and Fox or Mississippi tribe in Oklahoma, and the Potawatomies of Kansas and Wisconsin—are they self-supporting?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will let the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGUIRE] answer in regard to that.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman from Oklahoma is not familiar with the tribes in Wisconsin.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I want to say to the gentleman that the Sacs and Fox of Oklahoma have taken allotments, and that a large majority of them are capable of taking care of themselves, and that there is only a small amount of their money that they desire——

Mr. MANN. Are they involved in the dispute between the Sacs and Fox in relation to which one is entitled to the money between the Oklahoma Indians and the Iowa Indians?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. They are, but this fund is not in question; that is another fund.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to say further to the gentleman——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from South Dakota will pardon me, I am going to withdraw the point of order; but I will say that if any more propositions of this sort are offered at the close of the reading of a bill, subject to a point of order, and I am here, the point of order will be made if no opportunity has been given to see the amendment or have it printed in the RECORD. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the following amendments, to strike out of the bill the items that are cared for by this amendment that we have just adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers a series of amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, strike out lines 24 and 25; strike out all of page 14 and lines 1 to 8, inclusive, on page 15.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 10, strike out the word "four" and insert the word "three" in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the chairman of the committee which "four" in line 10 of page 21 is referred to. There are two of them in the line.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The second "four." It should read "three thousand five hundred" instead of "four thousand five hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, strike out all of lines 5, 6, 7, and 8.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the several amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 19028, the Indian appropriation bill, had instructed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments thereto, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, upon the bill and amendments I demand the previous question to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments? If not, the vote will be taken upon the amendments in gross. [After a pause.] The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that those who have spoken upon the bill may have five days within which to extend their remarks in the RECORD, limiting their remarks to the subject of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 5702. An act to supplement an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2045. An act for the relief of John B. Lord, owner of lot 86, square 723, Washington, D. C., with regard to assessment and payment of damages on account of changes of grade due to construction of the Union Station, District of Columbia;

S. 2429. An act for the relief of the estate of James Mitchell, deceased;

S. 5071. An act for the relief of William Frye White, owner of lots 103, 104, 105, and 106, square 754, Washington, D. C., with regard to assessment and payment of damages on account of changes of grade due to construction of the Union Station, District of Columbia; and

S. 5499. An act to grant certain lands to the city of Rawlins, Wyo.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 5499. An act to grant certain lands to the city of Rawlins, Wyo.—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 5071. An act for the relief of William Frye White, owner of lots 103, 104, 105, and 106, square 754, Washington, D. C., with regard to assessment and payment of damages on account of changes of grade due to construction of the Union Station, District of Columbia—to the Committee on Appropriations.

S. 2429. An act for the relief of the estate of James Mitchell, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2045. An act for the relief of John B. Lord, owner of lot 86, square 723, Washington, D. C., with regard to assessment and payment of damages on account of changes of grade due to construction of the Union Station, District of Columbia—to the Committee on Appropriations.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 21419, the post-office appropriation bill. Pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that until otherwise ordered general debate shall continue, the time to be divided between the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Pending a motion to go into Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that general debate upon the post-office appropriation bill shall be under control of the gentleman from Massachusetts, the chairman of the committee, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], and be equally divided. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire how long this general debate is supposed to run?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to determine now, but we believe that on Thursday we can determine the time, and we will then ask the House to fix the limit of debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 21419, the post-office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill, with Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the balance of my time, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NYE]. [Applause.]

Mr. NYE. Mr. Chairman, on one or two former occasions the House has indulged me in some general observations concerning what seemed to me to be the fundamental principles of our Government, largely ethical in their nature, and I have asked from the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads that I might be indulged at this hour to offer some observations upon the life and character of the great Father of his Country, that I might read one or two paragraphs from his marvelous Farewell Address and consider with this committee the general lessons which they seem to bring to us in this early part of the twentieth century. Nations of the past have gone down largely, I think, because they forsook the teachings of their great men. It is a conviction of mine that inspiration is the light of history, that here and there all along the centuries from the morning of history great men have held aloft the torch of human liberty and patriotism, and that but for the inspiration of those great men there would be little perhaps interesting in human history and in the advance of civilization as it is recorded in the past. These great men have based their lives and character upon that thought, it seems to me, that no one enjoys full freedom or could enjoy full freedom until he is ready and willing that all other men shall enjoy the same great blessing.

The highest and the most unerring proof of a man's real freedom is the fact that he wants others to enjoy the same blessing. It has been said that he who stoops above the fallen stands erect. Liberty as taught by the great men of the past, and notably this wonderful character of whom it was said: "No people can claim, no country can appropriate him, the boon of providence of the human race, his fame is eternity and his residence creation" is a liberty for all. [Applause.] These men have followed the example of the great teacher of nineteen hundred years ago, who taught that he who would save his life must lose it, he must lose the narrow life of self in the larger life of his fellow-men. This is the great lesson of the immortal Washington. There was a sacred writer, I think among the earliest in point of history, who said: "There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding." So there is a spirit in a nation. A nation does not consist of its outer phenomena, not in its broad territory, not in wealth, not in the commerce that moves upon the land or blossoms on the sea, that lies hidden in the mines or that waves upon our fields. The spirit of a nation, like the spirit of man, is that which animates, which constitutes the nation as the spirit of man constitutes the man. Constitutions and statutes are, after all, but forms, and if they be not animated by the spirit, then, like the human body, they are dead. It is the spirit that quickens and giveth life. And in this Government, for the people and by the people, we can not too often recur to the great undying precepts embodying and expressing the spirit of a government and of a nation.

There is, to my mind, in the political history of the world scarcely an incident more beautiful than that of the time and hour in which George Washington sent to his beloved country his farewell address. Forty-five years, practically a lifetime, of unselfish service to the State and Nation, in peace and in war, had crowned his mighty efforts as a patriot and as the founder of the principles of liberty in the western world. He longed for retirement and the tranquillity of domestic life at his own beautiful Mount Vernon. But he shared little of the selfish, sordid ambitions that actuate most of us, and which seem to be incident to and inseparable from our fallible human nature. It is true that muckrakers lived in his day; but the maligners are gone; they are dust. Thank God, there survives above all slander, above the arrows of hatred and bitterness, above cruel criticism that which is enduring, noble, and good. [Applause.]

Paul, nineteen hundred years ago, an outcast, spurned by the proud and haughty Nero, denounced as visionary, lives to-day, and we call our boy Paul, but we call our dog Nero. [Laughter and applause.]

This is a time and a day in which we may profitably dwell on the inner soul and life of the Republic, for in its last analysis the Nation's sources of real power are in the moral, intellectual, and spiritual wellsprings of its being.

I am going to speak by way of counsel, and in no criticism to-day, briefly upon one of the phases of our Government, practically a government of party; and before doing so permit me to read as a text a paragraph of Washington's Farewell Address which relates to the subject, and which contains a warning in the presence of which no man can afford to live as a purely selfish partisan, but in which he must consider his duty to his State, his Nation, aye, and to his party itself.

Let me read:

> I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular reference to the founding of them on geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.
> The spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness and is truly their worst enemy.
> The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual, and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.
> Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight), the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.
> It serves always to distract the public councils and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foments occasionally riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which find a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passion. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.
> There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the Government and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true, and in governments of a monarchical cast patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose, and there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be by force of public opinion to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming it should consume.

The great father of his country points out here the weakness of our Government, which up to the present time at least has proved itself to be a necessary weakness. There are some provisions in our Constitution, such as that for the election of President and Vice-President, which indicate that our fathers contemplated only the election of the best men, without regard to party. Evidently they did not anticipate the power and perhaps necessary tyranny of party government. We have in a great measure realized the evils of the party spirit which Washington predicted. Under our system of party government the majority of this House, whether Republican or Democratic, must intrench itself behind the party barricade and rally to the party standard in order to accomplish legislation. It is unfortunate for the country that a great revenue measure, affecting the business and industrial interests of the country, should necessarily be a party measure. The party in power, as in this case the Republican party, in order to accomplish any legislation, must do so through party zeal and often by methods summary and severe, while of necessity it is opposed on the other side by an equal party zeal and bitterness. This precipitates in the halls of legislation a fierce party spirit, out of which comes legislation that is bound to be as imperfect as the method by which it is secured. Individual independence and individual conscience are compelled to give way to the supreme necessity of party victory. Both antagonists, by the very fierceness of the contest, are forced into unnatural positions; and that debate which is the breath of liberty, and that deliberation which is the throne of power in legislation, are wanting.

I am not complaining. This is a condition incident to the imperfection of our human nature. But this is a day above all others in which we should take our bearings and seek a remedy, if any is to be found. I am an optomist. I want to leave one impression in these remarks—that I have a supreme faith that we shall outride all these obstacles to a pure and a free government, and that we shall gradually realize that parties after all are but the instrumentality of good government. [Applause.]

Of course the remedy is with the people themselves. Washington himself indicates that party is a necessity. He says it is a fire not to be quenched, but demanding a uniform vigilance in its control in order that it may not burst into such flame as to consume rather than warm.

A political party is but the instrumentality of good government, and in proportion as the people realize this, they will emancipate themselves from the bondage of any and all parties whose sole object is power and place. The public can not always be victimized by mere party sparring matches. "By their fruits ye shall know them." This is the test. I have worshiped at the shrine of Abraham Lincoln since I was old enough to hear his name. I recognize in the great moral conflict which gave him to the political world and in his unselfish life and devotion to freedom and equality, the real origin of that party to which I belong, and to which I feel the same sentiment of loyalty and fidelity now as in the past. But I want to see a greater individuality preserved. I want at all times to reserve for myself the right to say what is true Lincoln Republicanism and what is not; what is justice to all and what simply promotes special interests.

I thoroughly and profoundly believe that it is the duty of the American citizen to express a fidelity to whatever administration may be in power and to the officers intrusted with the responsibilities of Government. More profoundly than ever do I feel that we have now—and I do not wish to make a partisan speech—a man at the head of this Government who should inspire the truest confidence and the deepest loyalty on the part of all men and all women [applause]; a man who is broad enough and patriotic enough to embrace in his purposes and in his public service the general good of all his country and all of this great people. We may differ as individuals upon individual questions, but I feel that the great American people will in the last analysis stand by any great leader whose heart and whose purposes are for the permanent good of all and special benefit to none. His sincerity, his candor, his frankness, and his ability must inspire general confidence and make his leadership altogether worthy the loyal support of his countrymen. [Applause.]

He believes in the sacredness of the party pledge and the fulfillment of party promises. Full and perfect compliance with the letter of party pledges is not to be expected in all cases, but the country will recognize every honest effort toward a substantial compliance with such promises. Naturally, much must depend in the coming election on the good faith and honest efforts with which the party now intrusted with responsibility, seeks to make good its pledges. Conditions are peculiar. Harvests have been abundant, the business and industries of the country are active and apparently healthy beyond that of any former time, and yet there is much unrest and apparent dissatisfaction. It is a time, in my judgment, for calm, well-poised men like President Taft to be trusted. It is easier to tear down than to build up. It is easier to criticise than to commend, even where commendation is deserved. We believe in a leader who can and will possess his soul in patience, one who will give us an administration not violently radical nor stupidly conservative; an administration that is progressive, which will carry out the principles of sound reform and not attempt to "take the Kingdom of Heaven by violence." I firmly believe that time will fully justify the purposes, the motives, and the labors of this great leader in whom the people have placed their unfaltering faith and confidence. [Applause on the Republican side.]

In his speech February 12, in New York City, he said the Government must enforce the law—

> And if the enforcement of the law is not consistent with the present method of carrying on business, then it does not speak well for the present methods of conducting business, and they must be changed to conform with the law.

The country need not fear an Executive whose purpose is the enforcement of law without fear or favor, and who is determined that none shall be exempt from its provisions.

I consider that he stands for law and order and progress, and that every man, Republican and Democrat alike, may give allegiance to him while he is in office, and Republicans especially may commit the future of their great party to his wise and patriotic judgment. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, let us remember that human society will never be renovated, and that politics will never be renovated by men who are not themselves renovated. Under the great principles of this Government the individual seems to be supreme after all. In the last analysis his strength of character, his moral fiber, his ideals of government are the great underlying force and power of the Republic. I can not help a man up unless I am up where I can help him, and I am tired and wearied with the easy, cheap denunciation and criticism of men in public office. [Applause.]

I fear that the time may come when the best men in our Nation will seek to lay down the responsibilities of office, even as the Father of his Country did. I believe that every sentiment of patriotism calls upon the American people to proceed upon the assumption that men charged with public responsibility intend to do their duty. [Applause.]

Now I want to say, and you will pardon me if it may seem a little bit in the order of a sermon, what I had occasion once before to say, not speaking in any sectarian sense whatever, not denying to the various religions of the world whatever is good—and they all have some good—that this Nation of ours is fundamentally and essentially a Christian nation.

I read a few days ago the great argument of Daniel Webster in the Girard will case. I think I have read the most of his speeches and arguments that have ever been published, and I consider that the greatest, in my judgment, revealing the deepest and most profound statesmanship. He said that in the last analysis fundamentally this Government for the people and by the people is a Christian Government. He may have been in error in the application of the principle to the facts of that particular case. The court seemed to think so. Nevertheless, I believe it to be true, and I believe that Washington believed the same, and held to the same great idea. Let me read a paragraph:

> Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principles.

In its last analysis, Mr. Chairman, this Government for the people is a Government which embodies the teachings of good will to men and justice to all. We are favored by the bounties of heaven such as no other nation has ever enjoyed, accumulations of wealth year by year, new wealth, newly created from the soil and from the mines, beyond the dreams of men. But there is a greater wealth than this. It is in the hearts, in the lives, of the noble and patriotic people. It is in the American home. Freely ye have received, freely give. Be just, be generous to all men.

I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; thirsty, and ye gave me drink; a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; sick and in prison, and ye visited me.

Government for the people is a visitation of kindness and good will to men. I read some words from a poet the other day like this:

So many Gods, so many creeds,
So many roads that wind and wind,
While just the art of being kind
Is all this great world needs.

This, Mr. Chairman, is a lesson inculcated by the great Father of his Country. What is the strength of this Republic? It is not altogether in our Washingtons and our Lincolns. It is in the fact that you and I and all of us have some of the Washington in us. The power that supports and sustains this Republic is the fact that we have the virtuous qualities, in a measure, which these great men had.

I can comprehend no more a work of art than I have of art in myself. I can comprehend no more of Shakespeare and Burns than I have of the poet in my own soul. So this Nation's strength is not in its material wealth, but in its loyalty and love for the great Father of his Country and other illustrious patriots whose history and whose lives will be an inspiration as long as liberty lives.

A wonderful, a marvelous man! And we ought to pause on this day to take our bearings anew, to study the lessons of his great life. I have faith in the American people. There is some good in all people, in all parties, in all sections. I stood yesterday down in our Government Printing Office and addressed for ten or fifteen minutes probably 1,000 of the men and women who work in that great institution.

It was one of the most inspiring sights to me in the world, and an inspiration, to speak to the great useful men and women of our country, the men and women who had dropped their daily toil and labor for an hour to pay their devotion to that which is sweetest and purest and noblest in our country. After all, education is usefulness; after all, patriotism is usefulness; after all, Washington was great because he was perhaps the most useful man to the New World who has ever lived—a usefulness which lives and will live forever.

I shall not read more from the address. It is a message, let me say, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, of peace. It bids us cultivate the arts of peace at home and labor to bring about peaceful relations with all nations of the earth. The individual to succeed must have an ambition; so, too, must a nation. And to my mind the important sphere and plane of our ambition as a nation should be to lead the march of the nations of the earth in the establishment of the world's permanent peace. No fitter, nobler ambition can inspire the American heart, and with faith in our ability to lead this march our children's children and the generations yet to come may show forth to the world a nation whose invincible defense is its character, whose armor is its industry, whose sword is a peaceful commerce, and whose shield is the virtue and patriotism of a mighty people. [Applause.]

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield a half hour to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], a member of the Post-Office Committee.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I rise chiefly for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to that provision in this bill which seeks to repeal a law granting to the St. Louis Terminal Association $50,000 a year for the carriage of the mails across the Eads Bridge. If that provision stays in this bill, the carriage of the mails across the Eads Bridge will cost $7,000 a year if paid on the basis of one railroad, or $14,000 a year if paid on the basis of all railroads crossing the bridge, a complication that arises owing to our peculiar way of paying for the transportation of the mail.

But before I take up the matter of the Eads Bridge payment in detail I would like to make some observations in regard to the whole postal system, with a view of pointing out the necessity of a reorganization of this great department of our Government and the equally pressing necessity of asserting our rights against the invasions of the express companies, which, by their competition, not only prey upon our revenues, but also stand in the way of improvements in postal business.

The postal system has entered so intimately into the life of the Nation, in a social way, that it is difficult to judge the system by commercial standards. Its chief inspiration has been, is now, and will probably continue to be, as the inspiration back of the public school is, social. Its business side has always been subordinate to this social factor in it. From the very first there have been those who have tried conscientiously to hold the system inflexibly down to fixed business rules. Only one man was ever successful—Amos Kendall—and the result was disastrous for years. I am not going into that now.

The postal system is generally beloved by the people, and, as very often happens in this world, the thing which is beloved is frequently chastised. There are details in the postal system that are provoking to a mind like mine, for instance, and I have never had a business training.

Let me cite an instance: On route 76 a ship running from San Francisco to the island of Tahiti, in the southern Pacific, carries 42,000 pounds of mail annually, under the ocean-mail act, which many now desire to broaden and extend under legislation generally known as ship subsidy. This vessel of which I speak is of the third class, and receives for carrying the mail $1 per mile, or $42,180 a year for carrying 42,000 pounds of mail, or $1 a pound. But the payment is not by the pound. It is by the mile. And this curious thing happens. The captain of the ship sets out upon the sea from San Francisco, and steaming the direct route for Tahiti lands there, having completed a journey of 3,658 miles. But the mail which was loaded into the hold at San Francisco and is now dumped onto the docks at Tahiti has traveled 4,218 miles. The cargo which went on at San Francisco and which now goes off at Tahiti has been carried 3,658 miles. The mail has been carried 4,218 miles. The line of the log spins merrily in the blue waters of the tropical sea, and at Tahiti registers a sum total of 3,658 miles, but the United States mail has registered on the books of the department a trip of 4,218 miles.

The tract chart of the Navy Department shows that San Francisco and Tahiti are 3,658 miles apart; the charts of our postal system show that San Francisco and Tahiti are 4,218 miles apart. And we pay $1 per mile not on the navy's charts, but on the postal charts. The law says $1 per mile; and the Post-Office Department, between an Assistant Attorney-General who said that a mile on the sea could mean only a nautical mile of 6,080 feet and an Attorney-General who was equally certain that a mile could mean only a statute mile of 5,280 feet, took the shorter mile and vetoed the customs of the sea. So we pay not $36,580 a year, but $42,180, a difference of some $5,000 a year. I found this circumstance in the report of the expert accountants who went through the department two years ago and who suggested that this particular practice be changed. And it should be.

I have said that inflexible business rules will not always apply in our postal system. Let us take a look at our first-class postage rate. We charge a man just as much for transmitting a letter from New York——

Mr. STAFFORD. Before the gentleman leaves the subject of compensation under the subvention act of 1891, I would like to ask whether the same construction he has just cited in the case of Tahiti transportation is not applicable to the services of all the seven or eight lines that are now operating under that act?

Mr. MURDOCK. Undoubtedly.

Mr. STAFFORD. And if the gentleman will permit another question, whether the construction of the so-called "shorter mile" of 5,280 feet is not only a construction of the statute——

Mr. MURDOCK. Absolutely.

Mr. STAFFORD. In which there is no definite statement in regard to the nautical mile?

Mr. MURDOCK. Oh, absolutely. I said the law used the term "a mile," and an Assistant Attorney-General ruled that this meant a nautical mile and the Attorney-General said it meant a land mile.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not wish to make the impression that any reflection should be cast upon the members of the Post-Office Committee——

Mr. MURDOCK. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield on that point and permit a question?

Mr. MURDOCK. Surely.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is any other kind of business or anything that computes a mile on water as the Post-Office Department computes it?

Mr. MURDOCK. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. NORRIS. As a matter of fact, the construction put upon this law by the Post-Office Department is different from the construction put upon it by anybody else?

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman state from his knowledge whether that is the rule on the Great Lakes?

Mr. MURDOCK. I have no information about the Great Lakes on this score. I suppose a mile at sea is a nautical mile.

I have said that inflexible business rules will not always apply in the postal system. Let us take a look at our first-class postage rate. It is not only true that we transport a letter from New York to Philadelphia for the same rate that we charge for carrying a letter from New York to San Francisco, but we get our postal revenues in large part because of an arbitrary minimum charge on letters. The law says that letter postage shall be 2 cents for 1 ounce or a fraction thereof. In my belief, the words "a fraction thereof" in this relation are the most potent revenue producers in history, for they yield us something like $70,000,000 a year. If it cost 2 cents to send a letter weighing 1 ounce, it might seem fair to provide that it should cost 1 cent to send a letter weighing one-half ounce. But if I should persuade Congress to-day to provide that hereafter a letter weighing one-half ounce or a fraction thereof should go at 1 cent, the deficit next year would probably leap close to $100,000,000, for we get from first-class postage about $135,000,000 annually. If all letters weighed 1 ounce each, we would get, at present rates, 32 cents a pound. We get instead something like 84 cents a pound, because letters do not weigh 1 ounce each, but much less. There are 45 letters ordinarily to a pound, which means that the average letter weighs about a third of an ounce. It is the letter weighing a fraction of an ounce that makes the revenue for the postal system, for first-class postage pays 75 per cent of all moneys received for postal service. To the 90,000,000 people who pay it, 2 cents for a third of an ounce as freely as 2 cents for a full ounce, Congress should make its most profound bow of appreciation. It is the people who pay this rate who have made the system, in its larger development, possible. I do not think the 90,000,000 people would stand the charge if it were made by a business man or a corporation, but it is a government charge, and there is no general complaint.

The revenues received from the different classes of postage rates, as given by the Postmaster-General for 1908, based on an estimate, are as follows:

RECEIPTS.

First-class mail	$132,304,844.51
Second-class mail	9,066,043.61
Third-class mail	25,556,111.37
Fourth-class mail	7,755,921.70

The inflexibility of law and practices causes some very curious oddities and inequalities in the postal system. Let me cite a few:

Here is one: In the old days when a new post-office was established within 80 rods of the main traveled road the mail coach had to turn out and deliver mail to it without extra charge. The stagecoach has disappeared; the practice continues, for, theoretically, whenever a post-office is within 80 rods of the railway station the locomotive to-day must jump the track and deliver the mail to that post-office without cost to the Government.

Here is another: In the much-mooted question of second-class mail matter there are several curious provisions of the law, the survival of customs of other days. The publisher of the Ladies' Home Journal, if he place that publication in the post-office at Philadelphia for distribution by city carriers there, must pay, in addition to 1 cent a pound 2 cents for each copy thereof. However, the Government will take the same journal, carry it to Chicago or San Francisco at a cent a pound, and deliver it by city carrier in Chicago or San Francisco without the payment of the extra 2 cents per copy—that is, the Government will handle the Ladies' Home Journal, after it has had the expense of transportation, more cheaply than it will when it does not transport it at all. At the same time the publisher of the Saturday Evening Post, a publication of equal renown, may deposit that journal in the post-office at Philadelphia and it will be delivered by city carriers without the payment of the 2 cents a copy.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Why is it?

Mr. MURDOCK. Because the law gives preference to the weekly, and the Saturday Evening Post is a weekly, while the Ladies' Home Journal is a monthly.

Mr. HAYES. Is it not also true that the Saturday Evening Post will be distributed in Philadelphia without the payment of a cent a pound?

Mr. MURDOCK. My understanding is that in a free-delivery office the publisher does pay the 1-cent-a-pound rate.

This is another item: The Governmnet will carry 50 copies of a publication weighing altogether 1 pound from New York to San Francisco, distribute the 50 copies to carrier routes in that city, and deliver each of them to a separate addressee for 1 cent for the whole number. It will carry a single magazine weighing 1 pound from the one city to the other for the same amount, 1 cent. In both instances the freight rate for a pound would be, at $3 per hundred pounds, 3 cents. The cost to the Government for transportation alone by mail by weight on this pound via the Pennsylvania, Burlington, Union Pacific, and Southern Pacific railways, all paid the minimum rate per ton per mile, is 8 cents.

Mr. MANN. That is the railroad cost?

Mr. MURDOCK. That is what we pay to the railroads by weight for the transportation of that matter.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is for the distance across the continent.

Mr. MURDOCK. I actually routed a pound of mail and took it across.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. A shorter distance of course would be proportionately less.

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Does that also include the expense of handling the mail in the post-offices?

Mr. MURDOCK. Not at all. I am speaking purely of the matter of transportation and the cost by weight to the Government of transportation.

Again, to cite another curious item prevailing under our system, we deliver the mail to thousands and thousands of men in the country, on the farm. In the large cities we distribute the mail to the people at their doors. In New York City we make as high as 7 deliveries a day, and we have extended the system there to the point of making night deliveries to the residence portion. But the man who lives neither on a farm nor in a large city, the man who lives in a town of less than 10,000 inhabitants and with less than $10,000 annual postal receipts goes to the post-office for his mail. There is one man under your system whom you do not reach with delivery.

Here is another contradition: Under the law all classes of publications are permitted to carry paid advertisements, save fraternal and trades-union publications. They are not permitted to carry any paid advertisements excepting those pertaining to their orders.

Here is still another: If a man under our system start from San Francisco a 4-pound package to Vienna, Austria, he will pay for it at the rate of 12 cents a pound; or for a 4-pound package from San Francisco to Vienna, Austria, he will pay 48 cents. If he start a similar package from San Francisco for New York City on the same train in the same service, he will pay at the rate of 16 cents a pound, or for a 4-pound package 64 cents.

Mr. SMITH of California. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of California. Was the gentleman going to continue further on that, or was he going to leave the subject at that point?

Mr. MURDOCK. I was going to leave it there.

Mr. SMITH of California. Will the gentleman explain to the House the philosophy of that discrimination, or will he permit me to?

Mr. MURDOCK. How long will you take?

Mr. SMITH of California. It will take about two minutes, or perhaps a minute.

Mr. MURDOCK. Go ahead.

Mr. SMITH of California. The international parcels-post arrangements are effected by treaties negotiated by the Postmaster-General under a general law. Until about a year ago the international parcels-post arrangement between this country and foreign countries was for packages not exceeding a little over 4 pounds in weight; but Mr. Meyer, when Postmaster-General, being a very enthusiastic friend of the parcels post, negotiated new treaties by which we were to accept 11-pound parcels, and you consequently hear it stated that you can do exactly what the gentleman says.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman does not deny that that can be done.

Mr. SMITH of California. Oh, no; not at all; but the milk in the cocoanut is this: Nobody sends a parcel from San Francisco to Vienna. There is no considerable amount of business. The gentleman did not state the case fully.

Mr. MURDOCK. Oh, well——

Mr. SMITH of California. You can send an 11-pound package from this country to foreign countries, and yet you can only send a 4-pound package between post-offices in this country.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman deny that 4-pound packages can be sent in the way I have stated?

Mr. SMITH of California. Oh, no; not at all; but I am coming to the logic of the statement. In the first place, the 4-pound package which we may send as between ourselves was extended from this country to foreign countries. Then we took on the 11-pound package as a matter of international comity, because 11 pounds was the general weight throughout European countries; but the point is this: The 11-pound packages which come to this country are practically always from some person in a foreign country to a relative in this country and do not, as a matter of fact, go 100 miles from the Atlantic seaboard; so we do not carry 11-pound packages across the country, although we would if we were called upon to do so. This is the case because the foreign population stays in or near the seaboard cities.

Mr. MURDOCK. The difference is apparent to the man who pays the domestic rate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman please explain why the fraternal publications should not be permitted to have advertisements?

Mr. MURDOCK. Because the Third Assistant Postmaster-General says that the law prohibits the insertion in this kind of journal of paid advertisements other than those pertaining to the order.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Why should not the law be changed?

Mr. MURDOCK. There is no question at all about that.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has ascertained the difference in cost of transportation between San Francisco and New York City and between San Francisco and Vienna?

Mr. MURDOCK. No; I have not gone into that.

Mr. SMITH of California. Is it not proper to state in that connection that when we send a package from this country to Europe we get all the postage; we do not have to divide it with the foreign country?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; we are making money on the foreign mails.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire, with the permission of the gentleman from Kansas, to correct a misapprehension that may arise. We pay for the ocean carriage of the mail, and when it traverses a country other than that to which it is addressed we have to repay the country through which it is carried the rate of postage prescribed by the Universal Postal Union.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to yield further. Now, to continue with the citation of curious items: An almanac which contains more blank pages than printed pages goes through the mail at 16 cents a pound. If it contain more printed pages than blank pages, it goes through at 8 cents a pound.

Now, these inequalities in service, and contradictions, and others like them, do not impeach the whole system, but this and other inequalities do indicate the necessity of some revision of the system.

Mr. HAYES. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to ask him if he has anything that would enlighten us about the transportation of mails from New York to San Francisco—what the service costs, what service is rendered, how much the railroad company receives per car, for example, per mile, or how much per ton?

Mr. MURDOCK. I would have to figure that out specifically. I do not have it at hand. To resume:

The task of the revision of the system, to be successful, must be undertaken with great care, and any change must be accepted only after the most deliberate and searching analysis of every new proposal by Congress. And in any effort which is made for laying new foundations or repairing old ones the Government must take into account its own rights, which I believe have been in part neglected.

Recently I introduced a resolution preliminary to finding a more complete and satisfactory definition of the Government's monopoly in transportation of the mails, which resolution I will append hereto. Since 1792 we have asserted freely this monopoly, but we have frequently limited its enforcement. In the laws of 1792 the United States Government asserted its monopoly in the carriage of the mails and exempted certain mail matter from it, namely, newspapers and "pamphlets," the word in those days used to cover magazines and political brochures.

In 1827 the Congress again reasserted the government monopoly in the transportation of the mails, but failed to exempt newspapers and pamphlets. In 1843 the editors of New York and New Orleans decided that they would set up a post route of their own. They proposed to do so in order to transmit their papers quickly between those two cities. The matter was referred by the Government to the Attorney-General, and he held that these newspaper men could do nothing of the kind. So in 1845 Congress again reasserted the government monopoly in the carriage of the mails and again exempted newspapers and pamphlets. In 1872 Congress again reasserted the government monopoly of the carriage of mails, but failed to exempt newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, and other mail matter. Last year Congress passed a law again asserting the Government's monopoly in the carriage of mail, and there was no exemption whatever in any class of mail matter. We enforce the monopoly to-day only in respect to first-class mail.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Do the railroads get more for carrying the mail matter than for express matter?

Mr. MURDOCK. Surely they do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman tell us why?

Mr. MURDOCK. I can not go into that at length here. I do not believe there is any man in the world who can make a complete and conclusive illuminating comparison between express rates and the government mail rates, or, to state it more clearly, a comparison between what the Government pays to the railroads and what the express companies pay to the railroads for the transportation of matter.

The chief difficulty is here: If you attempt to reach a comparison, first of all the express companies in their relation to the railroads for the carriage of matter guarantee to the railroads a certain minimum earning. The amount of that minimum is secret. It varies on different railroads, and no one except the express companies and the railroads to which it is paid knows what it is. The minimum having been paid, then the express company pays, including that minimum, from 40 to 60 per cent of the gross receipts to the railroad, the difference of 40 to 60 per cent being the variation on the different railroads. Now, your comparison between the cost to the Government for the transportation of mail and the cost of transportation to the express company—that is, what it pays to the railroads—is further complicated by this: In the postal system we demand always celerity and frequency of dispatch in place of economy in dispatch. If I were Postmaster-General and the American people should say to me, "Sacrifice frequency of dispatch and celerity of movement to business-like economy," I could cut down tremendously the pay to the railroads for the transportation of mails, even under the present rate of pay; but our system from the first has demanded frequency of dispatch and celerity of movement. We do not send all the mail from New York to Buffalo over one railroad or by one train. We send it frequently. We do not send the bulk of the mail from New York to Buffalo by the shortest route.

[The time of Mr. MURDOCK having expired, Mr. WEEKS yielded him five more minutes.]

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has pointed out that it was difficult to make a comparison between the express pay and the railway mail pay. The gentleman, of course, means by the pound. He has made an allusion to the percentage that the express companies pay for the transportation—40 to 60 per cent. If it is a question of percentage, then for the transportation of mail to the railroads we pay less than 30 per cent, so that, on the percentage basis, the Government has decidedly the better of the express companies.

Mr. MURDOCK. I am not acquainted with the gentleman's 30 per cent figure.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Well, we appropriate some forty-odd millions of dollars for railway mail pay, and the gross income from the mail on all business is $220,000,000.

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. So that the percentage paid by the Government is 20-odd per cent, and the percentage paid by the express companies is 40 to 60 per cent.

Mr. MURDOCK. Still another and a most important matter comes up in making comparisons between mail carriage and express, and that is this: In the transportation of the mails and in the transportation of express matter the express companies get the short haul and reject the long haul, and the reason for that is this, that the long hauls in the transportation of the mails are the expensive hauls, and the short ones, for various reasons, density of traffic among them, are the remunerative hauls; and yet, because we do not assert, or rather enforce, our monopoly in the carriage of all classes of mail matter, so far as it may be constitutional, we are getting all of the long unremunerative hauls and we are losing many of the short remunerative hauls. Here is still another matter which increases the difficulty of a comparison between express and mail rates: By reason of our frequency of dispatch and our demand for celerity in movement we have a very low-average carload lot of mail.

I think the latest figures on this are something like 2½ to 3 tons. The express companies' average carload is much greater.

I believe that the time will come in this country in the transportation of the mails when we will go, when we will be forced to go, to some other system of pay to the railroads. I believe that Congress to-day, on the present system, should make further reductions in the scale by which we pay the railroads for the transportation of mails in grades above the 5,000-pound average daily weight, and, as I have contended in previous speeches on this floor, another season for the weighing of the mails should be selected. This would greatly reduce the present pay, just as the corrected divisor did.

I insert here the schedule of rates by which we pay for the transportation of the mails. It will be observed that this is a sliding scale. In the old days the scale ended with 5,000 pounds. In 1907 this was extended to 48,000 pounds, with a rate of $19.24 for every 2,000 pounds over 48,000 pounds. There are mail routes in the country which carry over 350,000 pounds of mail, average daily weight. If the old system is to be retained, then there should be an entire readjustment of the rates above 5,000 pounds, and the sliding scale should not halt at 48,000 pounds average daily weight, but should be extended to meet the larger average daily weights which are found in the service, and thus reduce the cost to the Government. In connection with this table are the rates we pay for railway post-office cars, which presents another contradiction in the postal system, for we pay for cars where we use 40 or more feet, and do not pay for less than 40 feet of space as part of a car.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How does the gentleman account for the fact that the railroads will haul for the express companies from New York to San Francisco for a sum of money two or three times less than they do the Government for the hauling of the government mail?

Mr. MURDOCK. I have no such information, I may say to the gentleman. I will say that if the railroads did so for the express companies, they did it because the express companies had an advantageous and close arrangement with the railroad companies, first, on the payment of the secret minimum, and, second, because they transported it in heavier carload lots.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Has the gentleman read Professor Adams's report upon the Walcott commission, who is now the statistician of the Interstate Commerce Commiss on, and is he not aware of the fact that Professor Adams makes the statement that railroads will haul any given amount of express matter from New York City to San Francisco two or three times cheaper than they charge the Government for transporting the mails?

Mr. MURDOCK. No; I am not aware of Professor Adams's testimony on that point. Years ago I read Professor Adams's testimony and his expert analysis before the Walcott commission. He was not expert to the point, I will say to the gentleman, of finding that the simplest, most rudimentary computation by the department was wrong, the matter of the divisor, in making computations of the average daily weight of mails.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more, and then I will finish. I realize it is getting late.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes additional to the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Adams made an expert analysis of the subject of cost of transportation to the railroads. Now, while I want to say to the gentleman I do not know what the express rates from New York to San Francisco are, I do know that the rate from New York to San Francisco on freight, bulk packages, such as second-class mail matter, when sent as freight, is $3 a hundred or 3 cents a pound. It does cost the Government 8 cents by weight to get a pound of mail matter from New York to San Francisco.

Mr. HAYES. In view of what the gentleman has said, I would like to ask him whether or not he thinks that the Government should pay more for the transportation of mails than the express companies are paying for the transportation of express matter?

Mr. MURDOCK. Not at all. I do not believe we should pay more. I have been speaking of the difficulty of comparing express and mail rates. I do believe that the Government should write now a new definition of its monopoly, that it should not lose in many cases to the express companies the remunerative short hauls of this country on mail matter [applause] and have only the unremunerative long hauls.

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman has stated, I believe, that the mail cars are so arranged that much smaller loads can be carried than in express cars.

Mr. MURDOCK. I made no such statement.

Mr. HAYES. I so understood him.

Mr. MURDOCK. I said the average carload lot carried in mail was smaller than the express carries, but it is not entirely a matter of construction of the cars.

Mr. HAYES. But is it not true that a very large part of the mail car is taken up by space for pouches and distributing tables and things of that kind?

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly.

Mr. HAYES. Therefore there is very much less space for the mail than there is for express matter in an express car which can be piled to the ceiling.

Mr. MURDOCK. I will say that that consideration goes to the matter of celerity, of distribution en route among other things. The pressure became so great that the great lines of this country running out of New York have put on storage cars in which the mail before it has been distributed is placed, and where it is deposited after it has been distributed. But this fact remains, we have not a monopoly in the transportation of the mails. We are losing the short haul on bulk packages, and we are taking in every instance the longer haul where there is no remuneration.

I do not know now fully just how far Congress should go in writing its definition. I believe it is true in the case of fourth-class mail and express matter and express rates and fourth-class postage rates that the express companies of this country cut right under the fourth-class postage rate to points across the country and charge an exorbitant rate on express by reason of our high fourth-class rate.

Now, I have spoken, because of interruptions, a great deal longer than I expected. But I desire to continue on the matter of the carrying monopoly, as related to second-class mail, for a moment. Congress has had extended hearings on several occasions upon the subject of second-class mail. There is an impression that second-class mail matter is out of balance with the rest of the system. There are various and divers proposals for a remedy. This, however, is a fact—again recurring to our failure to maintain a mail-carrying monopoly: If Congress attempts to raise horizontally the rate on all second-class publications, Congress will, in the transmission of bulk packages, be in large part increasing the zone in which the express companies now compete with the Government. Possibly it was in recognition of this condition of affairs that the postal commission of 1907, in making its recommendations for an increase in rates on serviceable things which should be added, to make the system second-class mail which requires separation and delivery, commonly known as "piece mail," a class of matter which the express companies refuse to take, and in which the Government has in large part a monopoly, the minimum charge of express companies being based upon the minimum package of 10 pounds; for the postal commission recommended that copies of publications sent in packages weighing not less than 10 pounds, to be delivered to one addressee, should be charged at the present rate, 1 cent a pound, while it recommended for single pieces of publications a graduated scale of charges in the following language:

> For each copy not exceeding 2 ounces in weight, one-eighth of a cent; more than 2 ounces, but not exceeding 4 ounces in weight, one-quarter cent; and one-half cent for each additional 4 ounces or fraction thereof.

This scale, adopted in form from continental Europe, from Austria in particular, makes a differential charge on two classes of publications. Under it the publication weighing 1 ounce per copy would pay at the rate of 2 cents a pound; the publication weighing 1 pound per copy would pay at the rate of 1¼ cents a pound.

It is interesting in that it reveals the circumscribed field in which the Government can act, owing to the competition of the express companies.

Second-class mail matter is in other respects also a very complex subject. I have already given some of its inequalities. In my opinion, second-class mail is so vital a part of the system that corrective measures, to be successful, must be drawn on such broad lines that the justice of the correction will appeal to all.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If it does not interrupt the gentleman, he stated in the first part of his remarks that he proposed to inform the committee concerning the St. Louis terminal contract for carrying the mail over the Eads Bridge.

Mr. MURDOCK. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. MURDOCK. Well, I ask for six minutes more, and then I will close.

Mr. WEEKS. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to say this before I come to the St. Louis bridge matter, as that will take only a minute:

I am in favor of a reorganization of this great department. In any reorganization of the system there are many antiquated things which must be discarded, and there are many new and serviceable things which should be added, to make the system fully responsive to popular needs. And that brings me to a consideration of the deficit. There have been annually recurring deficits, with a few exceptions, for nearly seventy years. Occasionally in postal history a Postmaster-General, striking a balance at the end of the fiscal year, on June 30, has announced that the department had a surplus.

But outstanding accounts for the fiscal year are not in until September 30; and in the year 1882, the banner year, where a surplus was claimed, there was, in fact, a draft upon the General Treasury of $6,000. Now, the ordinary impression of a deficit is that it is caused by innovations in the system. In a sense this is true, but it is in the sense in which Sancho Panza remarked that he had observed that large rivers usually ran by large towns. The first deficit was caused by a surplus in the postal system, and from that day to this as a deficit disappears and a surplus is anticipated immediately something new and useful is added to the system. Postmaster-General McLean had a surplus of $100,000 in 1827, a tremendous sum in those days. Congress was unwilling that this should go into the General Treasury. It was used in the extension of star routes. Before Congress had satisfied itself with star-route extension there was a deficit of $315,000, and a scandal. In answer to the storm of public indignation, Amos Kendall took hold of the department and gave it the form it has to-day. But he made the system so rigidly businesslike for a time that he wiped out not only the deficit, but wiped out also the postal business. Revenues remained stationary, or fell off. In one year one-third of all the postmasters in the country resigned. By 1840 the express companies, then new, were distancing the Government in the mail business. In that year in Boston and New York more letters were deposited and called for in the principal hotels there than in the local post-offices. It was during this period that the Government, overanxious on the score of businesslike economy, gave up the telegraph, a surrender the Nation must always regret. But the eventual disappearance of the deficit led to an innovation—cheap postage. The deficit again appeared, increased, and as it began once more to decline, city delivery was added, and when it was made city free delivery the deficit again mounted, and after a period again subsided. And as it fell nearer and nearer the point of a balance and a possible surplus a new departure, in the form of 2-cent first-class postage and 1 cent per pound for second-class publications was added. Once more the deficit leaped upward. Again, after a period, it declined, and again invited innovation, which came in the form of rural free delivery. Now, in light of this history, I submit that the function of a deficit is this: A check upon innovations while it is increasing; an invitation to innovation and addition to the system when it is on the point of disappearing.

It is a frequent charge that this or that branch of the service is accountable for the deficit. The parts of the system are so interrelated that these charges are largely gratuitous guesswork.

Undoubtedly the time has come when a reorganization of the service would be useful and profitable to all concerned. It has been over seventy years since a complete reorganization took place. The reorganization should include consideration of the following features, among others:

First. A new classification into bureaus of the work of the department, with a modern method of cost accounting.

Second. The creation of a commission of postal appeals, wherein questions of admissibility to the mails and challenged fraud orders could be heard and decided.

Third. A new definition of the Government's monopoly in the carriage of the mails and economic changes in the present methods of compensation for the transportation of the mails.

Fourth. A complete reconsideration of the rates on all classes of mail, not only as to the rate of one class by itself, but as to its relation to the rates of other classes.

Fifth. A thorough review of the present standards of classification of mail matter.

Sixth. The elimination of all antiquated methods which are out of harmony with the needs of the modern system, and the addition of such progressive features as will make the machinery of the present system of complete utility to the Nation.

All or any one of these changes must be attempted with extreme care, and Congress should not pass upon them without the opportunity of thorough research and of unhampered deliberation, with unrestricted right of separate votes on items and the privilege of amendment. Until such research and reorganization occur we will continue to grope, more or less, in the dark.

Now, as to the St. Louis bridge matter, about which the gentleman from South Dakota asked. Several years ago Congress, in recognition of the fact that the Eads Bridge was the only bridge into St. Louis across the Mississippi River, permitted the payment annually by law of $50,000 for the transmission of the mails across that bridge. Since that day the situation has changed. There is now at St. Louis a second bridge, the Merchants' Bridge, controlled by the St. Louis Terminal Association. The Government to-day is paying for the transmission of the mails also across the Merchant's Bridge route, paying therefor $20,000 a year. We are continuing, however, to pay $50,000 a year for the transmission of the mails across the Eads Bridge. I understand that we do not allow car pay in case of either bridge.

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads attempts in this bill to repeal the law allowing $50,000 a year for the transmission across the Eads Bridge. If that provision passes this House and the Senate and becomes law, then the Government will continue to pay for the transmission of mail across the Merchant's Bridge route $20,000, that amount being obtained by the usual methods of paying for the transportation of the mail—that is, by multiplying the average daily weight of mails by distance—and we will pay for the transmission of the mails across the Eads Bridge route in the course of a year not $50,000, but from $7,000 to $14,000 a year, arriving at that result by the ordinary method of computation, which is by multiplying the average daily weight of mails by distance.

Mr. NORRIS. That will treat both bridges alike.

Mr. MURDOCK. That will treat both bridges alike. Again, if we could transport the mails across the Eads Bridge by one company—that is, if we could concentrate all the mails on a single line—it would, after the repeal of the $50,000 provision, cost us $7,000 a year, average daily weight multiplied by distance; but by reason of our frequency of dispatch, by reason of the fact that we put an emphasis on celerity in this country, and for the further reason that we do not apply the so-called "lap-servfee rule" to the shorter terminal lines, we will probably pay not $7,000, but something like $14,000.

I thank the committee. [Applause.]

House resolution 230.

Whereas on December 23, 1909, the Wells-Fargo Express Company, one of several express companies, declared an extra dividend of 300 per cent on a capitalization of $8,000,000, in addition to a semiannual dividend of 5 per cent July 15, 1909, and a semiannual dividend of 5 per cent January 15, 1910, said dividends aggregating in all $24,800,000; and

Whereas the deficit in the United States postal service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, was $17,441,719; and

Whereas the Constitution having reserved to the General Government the power to establish post-offices and post-roads, and the statutes under the Constitution having given to the postal system created the exclusive right to transmit mail matter, and the Post-Office Department having exercised such monopoly of transportation in first-class mail matter only, but not in all classifications of second, third, and fourth class mail matter, said failure by the department to exercise a monopoly being based on an erroneous construction of the word "packets" and an assumption not founded in existing law; and

Whereas in his report of December, 1909, the Postmaster-General, Frank H. Hitchcock, gives the receipts on second-class mail matter as $9,066,043 and the Government's expense incident thereto, including transportation, as $73,194,07C, a difference of $64,128,026; and the receipts on third-class mail as $25,556,111 and the Government's expense incident thereto, including transportation, as $28,785,633, a difference of $3,229,522; and the receipts on fourth-class mail as $7,755,921 and the Government's expense incident thereto, including transportation, as $5,659,732, a difference of $2,096,189, the figures given setting forth losses on second and third class mail matter and a profit on fourth-class mail matter; and

Whereas the express companies compete with the Government in the transportation of second-class mail matter, the government rate on which is 1 cent a pound, the express companies carrying second-class mail matter for remunerative short hauls by making a lower rate than the government rate and not carrying it at all for the unremunerative long hauls, and accepting for carriage the remunerative bulk packets and rejecting the unremunerative single-piece packets of second-class matter, thereby permitting the Government to exercise its monopoly in the transportation of the mails only in the more extended and unremunerative zone, and also thereby preventing the Government from raising the rate on bulk second-class mail matter without further extending the limits of the zone where the express companies will compete, to the further enrichment of the Government's competitors, the express companies, and to the injury of the Government; and

Whereas in the transportation of third-class mail matter at 8 cents a pound the express companies also compete with the Government in zones where there is profitable remuneration and do not compete in zones where there is not profitable remuneration, thereby preventing the Government from carrying all third-class matter at a profit; and

Whereas in the transportation of fourth-class mail matter at 16 cents a pound the express companies also compete with the Government, thereby diminishing the profitable revenue to the Government in this class of mail, to the Government's injury and to the further enrichment of the express companies; and

Whereas the statutes from 1792 until the present day have described all mail matter under the terms "letters" and "packets;" and

Whereas it was held by the court, in the case of The United States v. Blackman, that the word "packets" in the law could not mean only a packet of letters, Blackman being a postal clerk who was convicted of detaining and opening a packet of tea in the mail and who contended to the court that the word "packets" in the law meant only packets of letters; and

Whereas the Post-Office Department exercises a monopoly of the transportation of first-class mail matter, but fails to exercise its monopoly of the transportation of second, third, and fourth class mail matter, such departmental practice being based on the holding that the word "packet" in the law does mean a packet of letters and means that only, such holding being expressed in a footnote in the Postal Laws and Regulations, said footnote having no basis in the statutes and such practice resulting in great loss to the Government; and

Whereas the laws passed by Congress in 1792, 1794, 1799, 1810, 1827, and 1845 gave the Post-Office Department a monopoly in the carriage of mail matter, as did the laws of 1872 and the law of 1909, a law now in force, to some of which laws there were certain exceptions, such exceptions in all the earlier statutes showing beyond doubt that a "packet" did not mean merely a "packet of letters;" and

Whereas by the laws of 1792, 1794, 1799, and 1810 the transportation of newspapers, magazines, and pamphlets was excepted from the government monopoly of transportation of mail matter, which exception was repealed by the law of 1827, and by the law of 1845 the transportation of newspapers, magazines, and pamphlets was again excepted from government monopoly of transportation of mail matter, which law was repealed by the law of 1872, which law of 1872 did not except magazines and pamphlets from the government monopoly of transportation, but did make certain exceptions relating to delivery of newspapers on contract star routes, and to the receipt and delivery of newspapers and periodicals at stations, before and after transportation, such exceptions being as follows: First, section 3888, Revised Statutes, "Contractors or mail carriers may convey, out of the mail, newspapers for sale or distribution to subscribers," said words "contractors or mail carriers" meaning contractors for transportation of the mail on star routes, or their employees, which express companies are not; second, section 3889, Revised Statutes, "The Postmaster-General may provide, by order, the terms upon which railway postal clerks may receive from publishers or any news agent in charge thereof, and deliver the same as directed, if presented and called for at the mail car or steamer, packages of newspapers and other periodicals not received from or intended for delivery at any post-office," which exception relates, not to the transportation of the mail between stations, but to the receipt and delivery at stations of newspapers and periodicals upon which postage has been paid; and

Whereas John A. Nelson, Attorney-General, on November 13, 1843, in an opinion rendered to the President, held that the term "packets" includes mail matter other than letters; and

Whereas Postmaster-General C. A. Wickliffe, in a communication to Congress on January 27, 1845, showed that packets and letters are not synonymous terms; and

Whereas J. S. Black, Attorney-General, in a published and exhaustive opinion given June 3, 1858, held: "The business of carrying letters and other mail matter belongs exclusively to the Government. It ought to be, and must be, so for very obvious reasons;" and

Whereas the court has held on constitutional grounds (ex parte Jackson, 96 U. S.) that Congress can not prohibit the transmission of printed matter by other means than the mail when it has excluded that matter from the mails, but did not hold that Congress could not prohibit the transmission of such matter by other means than the mail when it had included that matter in the mails; and

Whereas Blackman, above mentioned, a postal clerk, was indicted under section 3891, Revised Statutes, charged with taking a package of tea, and by counsel set up the contention that the statute did not provide for the case of the detention and opening of a packet of merchandise, and that "packet" meant a package of letters, said statute then being as follows:

"Any person employed in any department of the postal service who shall unlawfully detain, delay, or open any letter, packet, bag, or mail of letters intrusted to him, or which has come into his possession and which was intended to be conveyed by mail or carried or delivered by any mail carrier, mail messenger, route agent, letter carrier, or other person employed in any department of the postal service, or forwarded through or delivered from any post-office or branch post-office established by authority of the Postmaster-General, or who shall secrete, embezzle, or destroy such letter, packet, bag, or mail of letters, although it does not contain any security for or assurance relating to money or other thing of value, shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both," and the judge holding against him said:

"I am therefore of the opinion that the meaning of the words 'letter, packet, bag, or mail of letters' must be determined by reference to the provisions of the law defining mailable matter which was in force when the latter act was passed by section 130 of the act of 1872. Mailable matter is divided into three classes, and in the third class is included samples of merchandise not exceeding 12 ounces in weight. This definition of mailable matter is found in the same act which punishes the detention or opening of 'any letter, packet, bag, or mail of letters,' and I am therefore of the opinion that the construction contended for by defendant's counsel is too narrow and technical. If the statute had provided for mailing only letters, then we should have understood that the packet referred to was a packet of letters, but since the statute authorized the mailing of packets of merchandise, I hold that such packets were likewise included in the criminal provision under consideration. To hold otherwise would be to assume that Congress intended to provide for mailing packets both of letters and merchandise, but did not intend to punish employees for tampering with the latter. The more reasonable construction is that the word 'packet' in the statute in question means any packet which is mailable" (Fed. Rep., Judge McCrary, Sept. 21, 1883); and

Whereas the government monopoly in the transportation of all mail matter is set forth in the following citation in the Postal Laws and Regulations:

"SEC. 1136. No person shall establish any private express for the conveyance of letters or packets, or in any manner cause or provide for the conveyance of the same by regular trips or at stated periods, over any post route which is or may be established by law, or from any city, town, or place to any other city, town, or place between which the mail is regularly carried; and every person so offending, or aiding or assisting therein, shall for each offense be liable to a penalty of $150.

"2. Nothing contained in (this) section * * * shall be construed as prohibiting any person from receiving and delivering to the nearest post-office or postal car mail matter properly stamped."

Said exception last noted and designated by the numeral 2, relating to the receipt and delivery of mail matter, before and after transportation, but which statute is annotated in the Postal Laws and Regulations as follows:

"NOTE.—The Congress, under authority of the Constitution (section 1), has vested in the Post-Office Department an absolute monopoly of the transportation of letters and packets by regular trips or at stated periods over all post routes. The above proviso and sections make certain exceptions to the general statute. The term 'packet,' as used in this and following statutes, means a packet of letters; therefore the government monopoly does not extend to all matter admitted to the mails, but only to letters. Letter-carrier routes are post routes," which annotation has its authority in the following unpublished opinion of the Attorney-General, Wayne MacVeagh, June 29, 1881:

"SIR: In my opinion it is no violation of Revised Statutes, sections 3982 and 3985, for an express company to transport the documents mentioned in yours of the 15th instant, namely, manuscript for publication, deeds, transcripts of records, insurance policies, etc.

"It is prohibited, and an offense, to carry 'letters or packets.' What is a letter I can make no plainer than it is made by the idea which common usage attaches to that term.

"From the connection in which it is used, I have no doubt that 'packets' means a package of letters.

"Very respectfully, yours, WAYNE MACVEAGH.

"Hon. THOMAS L. JAMES,
"Postmaster-General."

Whereas in 1843, the Government having suffered great loss of revenue by the competition of express companies, John Nelson, Attorney-General, gave, in a communication to the President, the following history of the government monopoly:

"I am of the opinion that it is not competent to any person or persons other than the Postmaster-General or his authorized agents to set up any foot or horse post for the conveyance of any letters or packets upon any post-road established by law; that the term 'packets' used in the acts of Congress and in the last foregoing proposition includes newspapers, for the conveyance of which, therefore, no foot or horse post can be legally employed except by the Postmaster-General and his agents upon any post-road established by law; and that the term 'packets' used in the acts of Congress and in the last foregoing proposition includes newspapers, for the conveyance of which, therefore, no foot or horse post can be legally employed except by the Postmaster-General and his agents upon any post-road established by law; and that contractors employed in the transportation of the mail have no authority to carry any newspaper, magazine, and pamphlets other than in the mail except by authority of the Postmaster-General and in pursuance of a contract made for that purpose. * * * The term 'packets' includes newspapers, and this will be rendered apparent, apart from the meaning of the term, by a collation of the provisions of the act of 1827 with those of preexisting laws upon the same subject but which are not now in force. The fourteenth section of the act of 20th of February 1792, enacts 'that if any person other than the Postmaster-General or his deputies, or persons by them employed, shall take up, receive, order, dispatch, convey, carry, or deliver any letter or letters, packet or packets, other than newspapers, for hire or reward, or shall be concerned in setting up any foot or horse post, wagon, or other carriage by or in which any letter or packet shall be carried for hire on any established post-road, or any packet or other vessel or boat, or any conveyance whatever whereby the revenue of the general post-office may be injured, any person so offending shall forfeit for every such offense the sum of $200.' The same provision substantially is found in the fourteenth section of the act of 8th of May, 1794, which prohibited the establishment, upon private authority of 'any foot or horse post, stage wagon, or other stage carriage on any established post-road, or any packet boat or other vessel to ply regularly between one place and another between which a regular communication by water could be established by the United States, and the conveyance of any letter or packet other than newspapers, magazines, or pamphlets.' The act of March 2, 1799, contains the same prohibition, reenacted by its 12 sections in almost the same terms and excepting from the operation of the prohibitory clause, as to letters or packets 'newspapers, magazines, or pamphlets.' So also by the sixteenth section of the act of April 30, 1810, the like prohibition is imposed upon the establishment of private foot or horse posts for the conveyance upon the routes designated, of letters or packets, 'other than newspapers, magazines, or pamphlets.' As the law stood, therefore, when the act of the 3d of March, 1825, was passed, it is quite clear that whilst 'no private foot or horse post, stage, wagon, or other stage carriage, or sleigh on any established post-road or from one post town to another, between which a regular communication should have been established by the United States for the conveyance of letters' could have been set up, 'newspapers, magazines, or pamphlets' might, in virtue of the exception in the laws referred to, have been so conveyed; and as the act of 1825 made no provision whatever upon the subject of private posts and repealed all preexisting laws 'for the establishment and regulation of the general post-office,' the right to establish such private posts then existed without restriction. The act of 1827, however, revived the prohibition to which I have referred without the exception of 'newspapers, magazines, or pamphlets' contained in previous laws, extending its restrictive operation to 'all foot or horse posts for the conveyance of letters or packets (all packets) upon any post-road which is or may be established by law.' The nineteenth section of the act of 1825 had inhibited the conveyance of letters by stages or other vehicles, or by packets or other vessels under private authority; and the additional enactment of 1827 extends the inhibition to foot and horse posts upon post-roads and embraces within the interdict the conveyance of letters and packets, omitting the exception of 'newspapers, magazines, or pamphlets.' In thus briefly responding to the inquiries propounded by you, I have cautiously abstained from the expression of any opinion as to the policy of the enactments for the regulation of the Post-Office Department. I have sought only to ascertain what those laws are, leaving it to the proper authorities to amend them, if believed by them to be defective. Until changed by those competent thus to deal with them, I need not say that it is the duty of the Executive to enforce all their provisions;" and

Whereas in 1844 the existence of the Government's postal system having been threatened by the inroads of competing express companies, the House of Representatives passed, on February 28, 1844, the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be requested to report to this House what steps have been taken to prevent and punish the infraction of the laws of the United States prohibiting the establishment of any private mail or post for the transportation of letters and packets, and whether in his opinion the existing laws are adequate to the suppression of such offense," to which the Postmaster-General responded with divers suggestions; and

Whereas on March 3, 1845, in response to such suggestions, Congress, to perfect its monopoly of the carriage of mail matter, passed a law, section 9 of which is as follows:

"SEC. 9. That it shall not be lawful for any person or persons to establish any private express or expresses for the conveyance, nor in any manner to cause to be conveyed or provide for the conveyance or transportation by regular trips, or at stated periods or intervals, from one city or town or other place to any other city, town, or place in the United States between and from and to which cities, towns, or other places the United States mail is regularly transported under the authority of the Post-Office Department, of any letters, packets, or packages of letters or other matter properly transmittable in the United States mail, except newspapers, pamphlets, magazines, and periodicals; and each and every person offending against this provision or aiding and assisting therein, or acting as such private express, shall for each time any letter or letters, packet or packages, or other matter properly transmittable by mail, except newspapers, pamphlets, magazines, and periodicals, shall, or may be by him, her, or them, or through his, her, or their means or instrumentality, in whole or in part, conveyed or transported contrary to the true intent, spirit, and meaning of this section, forfeit and pay the sum of $150;" and

Whereas on June 8, 1872, Congress passed a law repealing section 9 of the act of March 3, 1845, but continuing its monopoly of the transportation of mail matter without exceptions as to transportation, save as noted above, which law was as follows:

"SEC. 288. That no person shall establish any private express for the conveyance of letters or packets, or in any manner cause or provide for the conveyance of the same by regular trips or at stated periods, over any post-route which is, or may be, established by law, or from any city, town, or place to any other city, town, or place between which the mail is regularly carried; and every person so offending or aiding or assisting therein shall for each offense forfeit and pay $150;" and

Whereas by act of March 4, 1909, Congress continued the government monopoly of the carriage of mail matter without exceptions other than those noted above, which law, effective January 1, 1910, is as follows:

"SEC. 181. Whoever shall establish any private express for the conveyance of letters or packets, or in any manner cause or provide for the conveyance of the same by regular trips or at stated periods over any post-route which is or may be established by law, or from any city, town, or place to any other city, town, or place between which the mail is regularly carried, or whoever shall aid or assist therein, shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than six months, or both: Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall be construed as prohibiting any person from receiving and delivering to the nearest post-office, postal car, or other authorized depository for mail matter any mail matter properly stamped:" Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be respectfully requested to report to this House what steps have been taken to prevent and punish the infraction of the laws of the United States prohibiting the establishment of any private mail or post for the transportation of packets, including second, third, and fourth class mail matter, and whether, in his opinion, the existing laws are adequate to the suppression of such offense.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 21419) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes, and has come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that those who speak on this bill have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that those making remarks upon this bill have permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There should be some limit.

Mr. MANN. For how long a time?

Mr. WEEKS. For five days.

The SPEAKER. For five legislative days. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I ask to amend that request by making it five days after the completion of this bill.

Mr. WEEKS. I accept that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman modifies his request, limiting the time to five days after the completion of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean the passage of the bill in the House? The completion of the bill will be after it comes back from the Senate, when the conference report is agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. After the passage of the bill in the House.

The SPEAKER. For five legislative days after the passage of the bill in the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WEEKS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.
